'Nobody Plans To Die From Drugs'

(The following letter was received by the Times Friday. We can vouch for its authenticity. But to spare other members of the family further grief, we publish it without names.)

Last week my son died in his bedroom, in Victoria.

There are ignorant people who would have looked at his long hair and said, "hippy" in the same tone one might use for garbage.

But how many boys have taken a city-wide trophy for their elementary schools, in track?

How many boys of twelve would voluntarily have carried a six-year-old sister on their backs when she was tired?

How many boys in their early teens go to the Empress and hold their mothers' chairs and coats for them? (He said, "I just want people to see that long hair doesn't make you sub-human.")

And how many boys, long-haired or otherwise, have ridden a bicycle over the Malahat with another guy to spend a week fishing, sleeping in the open, cooking for themselves and then riding back? (Making sure to phone Mother so that she doesn't worry!)

How many boys of sixteen embrace their mothers and other loved ones regardless of surroundings?

It was important to him not to be "sub" anything. He had — I should say "has" because we still feel it — incredible compassion, insight far beyond his sixteen years, and HAD a strong desire to go to college.

That he overdosed on God knows what drug was a hideous mistake. I am certain, as is anyone who knew him, that it was not a part of his plan to die now.

No one, with the possible exception of addicts, which he was not, really plans to die from drugs. Still it happens.

Therefore, I want to congratulate you on your series about drug abuse. Do, please, continue them: Further than planned, if possible.

Reds Storm Position

CHIEF JAILER for Canada's prisons Jean-Pierre Goyer, unveils a model of a vocational building some of the prisoners at William Head Minimum Security Institution will construct this year. Looking on is Ivan Busky, spokesman for the prisoners, who applauded the solicitor-general's plans to change prisons into rehabilitation centres but who maintained that as a start more prisoners should be put to work on this project.

Hue Next Target

Times News Services

SAIGON — Communist forces stormed a major South Vietnamese position on strategic Highway 14 north of the Central Highlands city of Pleiku today, killing or wounding more than 100 defenders including one American, field reports indicate.

In the north, North Vietnamese troops applied heavy pressure on government units within seven miles of Hue, well within the main government defence line of the city.

In nearly four hours of fighting on Highway 14, at least 36 Communists were killed inside the barbed-wire perimeter of Artillery Base 42, about six miles north of Pleiku and 236 miles north of Saigon, the reports said. U.S. military spokesmen said one of the dead was a U.S. adviser.

COMMAND POST

A force of about 1,900 South Vietnamese paratroopers has been attempting to clear Highway 14 between Pleiku and the province capital of Kontum, 30 miles to the north. Military spokesmen said 75 Communist soldiers were killed Friday in a clash nine miles south of Kontum and government losses put at nine dead and 37 wounded.

LUSH POT PATCH 'NEVER TENDED'

OTTAWA (CP) — Fouad Hajjar, 47, who denied any knowledge of how a 4,535-plant "pot patch" sprouted in his back yard last summer, was found guilty Friday of unlawfully cultivating marijuana.

A botanical expert testified that the marijuana plants, some of which towered 18 feet above the ground, were "cultivated, watered, fertilized and cultured."

A neighbor testified to seeing Hajjar watering the yard between 7:30 and 8 a.m. each morning for months.

Hajjar denied he ever sprinkled the yard and said he had never done any digging there after one job to remedy a balky septic tank.

He will be sentenced later.

U.S. Dollar Deal Carried Through

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States will formally devalue its dollar at noon EDT Monday, carrying out a bargain struck in late December with the richest non-Communist countries.

Treasury Secretary John Connally said Friday he will notify the International Monetary Fund Monday that the new par value of the dollar is one thirty-eighth of an ounce of gold instead of the previous one thirty-fifth, a devaluation of 8.57 per cent.

The declaration is strictly formal, but it is the last official step by the United States to fulfil its agreement to devalue the dollar.

Since last December, when the international monetary agreement was reached, major nations have been trading their money as if the dollar was already devalued, adopting a new system of currency exchange rates which also included revaluation of several other currencies.

It is the first time since 1934 that the dollar has been devalued.

Congress made the move possible by raising the official price of gold to $38 from $35 an ounce. That bill was passed and signed into law by President Nixon March 31.

The treasury waited another month for passage of an appropriations bill enabling the U.S. to fulfil so-called "maintenance-of-value" obligations in international organizations.

The Senate cleared the legislation Friday. It called for an appropriation of $1.6 billion.

The monetary agreement reached in December is only an interim settlement. The major nations are expected to get together this year to begin discussing reform of the world monetary system, a job that is expected to take a year or perhaps two.

B.C. Skimping In Heroin War

By ROBERT OLVER

(Last in a series)

The province of British Columbia, which Premier Bennett continually refers to as one of the richest in Canada, deals with about six times the number of heroin addicts as does Ontario, and on less than one-tenth the budget.

That does not indicate, as politicians might have us believe, that B.C. gets six times the mileage out of its money. It means simply, according to those people who are in the front lines of the war against drug abuse, that B.C. has not come to serious grips with the problem.

Here is how the agencies which deal with narcotics addiction in B.C. get their money, according to Douglas Denholme, executive director of the B.C. Narcotics Addiction Foundation.

"The money comes in a very complicated way from seven departments or agencies of two governments — the federal and the B.C. government," he said.

For 1972-73 the budgeted grant from the B.C. provincial secretary's department is $300,000. The federal solicitor-general's department, on a fee-for-service basis — which relates to the number of patients actually being treated — will contribute about $20,000.

There will be additional funds from the provincial secretary's department for special projects. The amount in any given year is difficult to predict and depends on what projects are proposed and approved.

The NAF's soft drug operation is supported by an $85,000 grant from the federal health and welfare department. The operation's projected cost is $120,000.

In total, the NAF's projected budget for 1972-73 is $720,000. Of this, $38,000 is for research, $71,000 for education, $238,000 for treatment, $155,000 for rehabilitation and $141,000 for prevention.

He claimed that Ontario's Drug and Alcohol Research Foundation has a $7.5 million budget.

Says Denholme: "We have a program which touches all the bases. But because of the amount of money we have available, we are forced to react rather than to lead.

"It is very easy for organizations like ours to scream that

'WORKING PRISONER' PROJECT UNVEILED

By BRYAN McGILL
Times Staff

Solicitor-General Jean-Pierre Goyer Friday envisioned the end of laziness in Canada's penal institutions as he officially kicked off a pilot pay-for-work project at William Head Minimum Security Institution in Metchosin.

Before a host of newsmen and a few of the prisoners chosen to do the work, and flanked by prison officials, local politicians and dignitaries, Goyer took opportunity to express his ideas of a rehabilitated prisoner.

He said about 20 inmates, paid the minimum federal wage of $1.75 an hour, will construct the $278,000 vocational training building which will be "a first step to fully recognize that prisoners are still citizens."

In "a new system that will specialize in treating inmates as individuals," Goyer said, "we don't want to play motherhood. We want them to take up their own responsibilities.

"Do we want a good prisoner or a good citizen?" he asked.

After the ceremony, it was learned that William Head inmates see themselves as individuals with rights and who do want to work.

In an interview, Ivan Busky, 25, chairman of the inmate committee, said most of William Head's 120 prisoners are unhappy about the project because only 20 of them, at most, will be allowed to work on the project.

"They're feeling left out," he said.

He said prison officials had earlier given the impression that everybody would be involved.

Busky said most of the inmates there are serving their last year and when they leave without any money some will "pull a score to get money to exist."

Those picked to do the work are qualified tradesmen, and from the $1.75 they make they will pay income tax, Canada pension, unemployment insurance and fees for room, board and clothing. Inmates at large are paid 85 cents a day for regular prison duties.

Busky said inmates could learn trades by working on the job, in addition to the vocational courses now offered.

He said the inmate committee will continue to try to negotiate with prison officers on getting more prisoners involved, but "we are being blocked."

Jail superintendent Gamaliel Milner commented that only "a few are dissatisfied."

He said there isn't enough work for more than 20 prisoners and added that if 20 qualified tradesmen can't be found within William Head others will be brought in from other prisons in B.C.

Busky also maintained the minimum security prison isn't as liberal as it makes out to be.

"They don't trust you as much as they let on."

He said that he himself was granted 198 passes in the me-

PALERMO, Sicily (Reuter) — Police and soldiers toiled all night in an attempt to recover the bodies of 115 persons killed when an Alitalia DC-8 jetlinger exploded on a hillside here in Italy's worst air disaster.

Dawn revealed a terrifying scene of desolation on the harsh hillside above Palermo's Punta Raisi Airport, with wreckage and bodies, many charred and mutilated, scattered over more than a mile.

The 108 passengers, mostly Italians, and crew of seven died when the airliner, on a domestic flight from Rome to Palermo, exploded in a ball of flames while coming in to land in bad weather late Friday night.

Two military helicopters were called in at first light to help to recover bodies from the more inaccessible parts of the crash hill, 2,250-foot Montagna Lunga.

It was Italy's worst air disaster and came as Alitalia celebrated the 25th anniversary of its founding on May 5, 1947.

On the list of passengers, two passengers were identified only as Craighton and McCarthy and no further information was available.

Brothers Awaits Teachers' Attack

By BRIAN BUTTERS
Times Staff

VANCOUVER — Education Minister Donald Brothers said Friday he expects the B.C. Teachers Federation to spend a "major proportion" of its $1.25 million political action fund against him in his home riding of Rossland-Trail.

Brothers made the comment at a press conference following his address to the annual convention of the B.C. School Trustees Associaion.

Asked if he is concerned about being the "favorite target" of the teachers in their campaign against provincial educational policies, Brothers said he is "very interested in their campaign."

"If it's a hard and sturdy fight they are looking for, they are going to get it from me in Rossland-Trail," he said. "I expect them to spend a major proportion of their fund against me."

Brothers also said he expects the BCTF to send their most politically-motivated speakers to his riding—"their storm troopers."

Asked if he would be willing to enter into a public debate on education with BCTF president Adam Robertson, Brothers did not make a direct response but said he expects the debate to "wax long and loud in Rossland-Trail."

The minister said in response to a question that he would be willing to answer any questions from Robertson through the government-sponsored Ask Your Provincial Government radio campaign.

Brothers said his office has been receiving two or three letters a day from teachers who object to the BCTF deducting money from their salary for political action. He said that right after last month's teacher convention the letters had been coming in at a rate of about six a day.

At least 100 letters like this have been received in total, he said. This is an indication of "resentment among a great number of teachers in the province," he said.

Brothers referred to the advertising battle being waged by the teachers and government against each other.

The BCTF has been running newspaper ads in the past month attempting to point out that teachers have not received excessive pay increases while the government has attempted to point out that education costs are spiralling out of control and that B.C. teachers are the highest paid in Canada.

Brothers said the reason for the government ads is that the press did not give sufficient information to the public in its coverage of Bill 3, which amended the Public Schools Act to place a limit on teacher salary increases and restrict school board spending.

"These are merely informational advertisements," he said.

He said the efforts made to educate the province's young people about drugs must be handled with extreme care, since inaccurate or incomplete statements will only cause young people to disbelieve whatever is said.

Brothrs also said it is important that school districts take a close look at the amount of money they are spending, particularly in the area of administration.

The Greater Victoria school board has just hired a firm of cost consultants to conduct a study of its own admininistration and costs. A report will be made in early July.

Large Ad Budget Criticized

they need more money. I don't happen to subscribe to that view. It is reasonable for our kind of organization to be 10 per cent below what we think we need. That keeps us on our toes. But when you get to 30 per cent below, that gets ridiculous."

The financial backing for the anti-drug war in B.C. comes from the proceeds of a $25,000,000 fund which at interest of 7 per cent would amount to about $1.75 million per year.

A spokesman for the NAF, who asked not to be identified, said: "We get about $325,000 of that amount. The rest is being spent on something else. We would say that a disproportionate amount is spent on advertising."

He added: "We would rather see the money spent on people than on airwaves and the newspapers."

The B.C. government spends 75 per cent of the proceeds from its fund on ads. What about those ads, which time and again — in interviews with people concerned in the drug scene — have drawn criticism on the basis that they represent a waste of sorely needed money.

Dr. Phillip Ney, child psychiatrist at the ERIC Martin Institute: "They are spending money on ads without knowing how effective they are or if they are effective at all.

"No one knows. We don't know what the subtle effects of such ads might be. For instance, it is quite possible that for some of the children who see the ads — take the one which features a convict telling of the dangers of drug abuse — that they might actually find that an attractive proposition.

"Many young people," said Ney, have a marked aversion to anything nebulous. They want to know what the future holds. They don't want the uncertainties and the hassles that life may or may not hold — they want to know.

"And so, never having been there, they may think they would rather consider the certainty of a jail term — which is a known factor — in preference to the uncertainties which they would otherwise have to deal with."

Education Minister Donald Brothers is chairman of the Council on Drug, Alcohol and Tobacco, which administers the proceeds from the $25 million fund, and here is his rationale regarding the spending for ads.

"That is money well spent. That is very effective. How else are you going to educate the public if you don't advertise?"

Back to Ney; "There are strictly scientific ways of finding whether they are working or not."

Dr. Larry Axmaker, psychologist with the Greater Victoria School Board: "The most effective educational approach would be, I would think, not through ads. The effective way would be to work with the entire family. Only a few years ago, we seldom saw a child referred here because of a drug problem. Now the numbers of referrals indicate that drugs are available to kids of all ages.

"There are many reasons why they get involved, but a lot of them have serious problems at home and these problems often stem from a lack of communication between parent and child.

In Axmaker's view: "There is no doubt that if accurate, realistic information on drug abuse could be provided the young, I would hope by the time they reach high school, children would be able to make an informed decision."

"Most kids start without making any decision at all. They just start out of curiosity," Axmaker claims.

David Allan, principal of South Park Elementary: "The peer group is supreme. From the earliest age children, particularly in this neighborhood, become part of a sub-culture — no, make that a culture, that is their own.

"It has leadership, it has rules, it has a code, it has all of the elements that are present in adult society, all of the elements present in any society," Allan said.

"If, to gain acceptance, to belong in the peer group, the culture, the child must indulge in behavior which is calculated to annoy others — say his parents or older people — he will do it.

"He will not be deterred by the fact that he might get into trouble with his parents or his teachers or whomever. It will be far more important that he not get into trouble with his society, his culture.

"If, for acceptance, his peers demand that he smoke marijuana — or do anything else — he will probably do it, even if he does not really want to very much.

"It would take a child with a very strong character, a very great deal of poise, to resist this pressure. Our schools have to become a real part of the total community. All of the people in the community have to work, give their talents, their knowledge, to help develop this poise."

Dr. James Laing, director of the Narcotic Addiction Rehabilitation Centre (NARC): "What is needed is education in coping with life. We do not need drug education programs, we need life education programs."

Sgt. William Chisholm of the Saanich police department:

"By the time they reach high school it is too late to change any minds."

Mrs. Margo Hall, guidance counsellor at Mount Douglas Senior Secondary: "They have made a decision — to get involved or not to get involved — by the time they get this far in school. And that decision is usually made on the basis of what their peers tell them and not necessarily what the facts are. We have to find a way to get the information to them before they get to high school level."

And why can't we do that? Well, the people interviewed had many ideas, many ways of sharing the blame. But interestingly enough, it was the attitude of parents which was mentioned time after time as a barrier to effective education.

"Parents are always the last to know. The last to get with it. Every parent thinks his family is safe."

RESORT HIT

Spokesmen reported four 107 mm rockets slammed into the popular resort of Vung Tau, 40 miles southeast of Saigon, wounding two soldiers and seven civilians.

At least 10 U.S. B52 bomber strikes were flown over Kontum province in the 24-hour period that ended at noon today. Total B52 missions across the country were 22, the U.S. command said.

The most serious fighting today was reported near the old imperial capital of Hue, 400 miles north of Saigon, which Allied officers say will be the next North Vietnamese target in their five-week-old offensive.

Hue itself was said to be down to about 95,000 persons after refugees last week more than doubled the population to 315,000. Streams of refugees were pushing down Highway 1 toward Da Nang, 50 miles to the south.

'Trudeau Leading Canada On State Socialism Path'

By WALTER McKINNON
Times Staff

Prime Minister Trudeau is spearheading a deliberate drive to destroy traditional Canadian society, Yukon Progressive Conservative Member of Parliament Erik Nielsen charged Friday night.

The Liberal prime minister is leading Canada "away from incentive society and down the path to state socialism," he continued, with policies which have struck fear in the population and are leading to the crumbling of the Liberal party.

Nielson, addressing Esquimalt-Saanich riding Tories, cited a number of recent defections from the Liberal ranks in Ottawa to bolster his charges against the prime minister and said he has watched the fear of Trudeau's policies begin in the west and now take hold in Eastern Canada.

It is a fear sparked by the increasing intrusion of the federal government into "every facet of our individual lives," he said. And it is a fear of the tremendous "proliferation of government" since Trudeau became prime minister in 1968.

The headlong rush of Canada toward state socialism, Nielsen said, is being accomplished by "devious means, by deceit" on the part of Ottawa, he said.

An excellent example of both devious means and proliferatiion of government under Trudeau, he said, was the establishment of "Goyer's Gumshoes," a security force under Solicitor-General Jean-Pierre Goyer to do a job "the RCMP have been doing efficiently for years."

"These things should make every thinking Canadian stop and wonder where we are going," Nielsen said.

Nielsen, a vociferous advocate of northern development, also attacked a recent proposal for a highway down the Mackenzie to link Arctic tidewater with southern Canada as "a Trudeau pipe dream."

"At an announced cost of about $100 million, my estimates show that the 1,049-mile highway willl be no more than a two-track back country lane," the Whitehorse MP said.

The money, he suggested, would be far better used to improve existing northern highways such as the Alaska and the Dempster.

Nielsen attacked another "pipe dream" of the government, a proposal to spend government money on studies of giant aircraft to carry Arctic oil south.

"Can you imagine the effects of a mid-air accident to a giant plane carrying a full load of oil? Who will pay those clean-ups?" he asked. "Or perhaps the day won't be far off when some desperate character says 'Take this oil-plane to Havana,'" he continued. "Who will pay for lost goods?"

Nielsen discussed various facets of Arctic oil and the risk of pollution it poses, attacking "the legalistic and jurisdictional jungle that prevents any direct solution to the pollution threat of Alaskan oil to our West Coast."

He was critical of the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act and the amended Canada Shipping Act, both introduced by the Trudeau government.

"The government apparently recognized that in the north, pollutiin control must extend 100 miles," Nielsen said. "It unfortunately did not have the courage to act with the same consistency of Canada's West Coast."

The result, he said, is that super-tankers of Alaska oil can pass close to but outside of Canadian territorial waters.

"If an oil spill takes place, oil spilled in international waters will be driven by currents into our territorial seas."

Nielsen said that when tankers of Arctic oil begin to ply the coast, even if there are no major spill disasters for 20 years "in that 20 years two million barrels of crude oil and related products will be thrown into the ocean merely from the normal day-to-day operations."

"Such a quantity is many times the amount thrown out by the Arrow when she ran aground in Chedabucto Bay. Add to this amount quantities of oil thrown into the sea from small accidents, a loose pipe coupling, overflow from tanks, careless discharges of oil-laden waters close to shore, and what do you get?"

We can no longer treat our oceans as sewers, he warned.

Nomination Delayed

They had a candidate. They had a turnout of almost 100 party stalwarts. They had a high-powered guest speaker, federal Progressive Conservative MP Erik Nielsen.

But what they didn't have was a statutory five-day advance warning of the meeting.

Somebody, somewhere along the line, failed to mail the notice of meeting on time. There were veiled references to the federal postal system, sincere apologies from the local party executive, motions from the floor and secret ballots to sort out the problem.

As a result, a new nominating meeting is to be called — with adequate notice — within the next 14 days.

The only prospective candidate so far is Donald Munro, a native of the west coast who is at present on leave of absence from the external affairs department.

'RCMP Eye Subversives'

Solicitor - General Jean-Pierre Goyer said here Friday that undercover RCMP is being carried on to deal with subversive activities within Canada.

Questioned at a visit to William Head Minimum Security Institution, Goyer said his new security and planning research group is fully operational now and is analyzing information from police agencies, especially from the RCMP.

Asked whether RCMP work is being expanded to investigate possible unrest and subversion, Goyer replied "those types of subversive things are taking place."

Asked again if he meant undercover work was being stepped up, he replied "there's all types of investigations."

In reply to criticism that his security branch is a spy system superceding the present work of RCMP, Goyer insisted the branch only collects information and evaluates it on a social, economic and psychological basis.

He said the branch, through the RCMP, is keeping an eye "on violence - prone groups" and added "there is more and more danger from within."

He said the security branch is to determine through its studies whether Canada can afford to absorb activities that go beyond legitimate dissent.

He said information is being collected in a legal way, and if illegal activities are covered it will still be up to the police to decide to take action.

Exciting Final Won by Leeds

LONDON (CP)—A superbly headed goal by Allan Clarke gave Leeds United a 1-0 victory over Arsenal in the English Football Association Cup soccer final at Wembley Stadium today.

Clarke's goal came in the 56th minute of a game packed with excitement. Arsenal, last year's winners of the coveted trophy, was well beaten.

One of Leeds' stars, Mick Jones, lay writhing on the ground with an arm injury as the final whistle blew.

After Leeds had received the Cup and the Arsenal players their losers' medals, Jones was helped up the ramp to the Royal Box to get his medal from Queen Elizabeth. Wincing with pain and with his arm strapped to his side, he was given a hero's ovation.

It was Jones who sent over a magnificent cross from the corner flag for Clarke to head the winning goal.

There was also excitement outside the stadium several hours prior to the match as rival gangs of supporters clashed before being broken up by police, who made about six arrests.

Some fans spent the night waiting outside the stadium and eight hours before the kickoff thousands were milling in front of the gates.

Tickets scalpers were reaping a bonanza, with desperate fans reported paying up to $520 for $13 tickets.

Security guards were busy trying to stop fans without tickets trying to climb over the high walls as the cup enthusiasm reached an unusually high pitch.

Things were calmer at the Scottish Cup final at Glasgow as highly favored Glasgow Celtic hammered Hibernian of Edinburgh 6-1.

Celtic, which won the Scottish League title this season for a record seventh successive time, completed the big double for the third time in six years.

MPs Asked to Limit Free Printing

By JEFF CARRUTHERS
Times Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA — In an attempt to eliminate electioneering at public expense, federal MPs are being asked to place voluntary restrictions on the types of materials they can have printed at Government expense, for distribution to constituents.

In a letter to House leaders this week, Speaker Lucien Lamoureux has suggested specifically that MPs restrict the material they have printed by the House of Commons printing unit to material put out in their capacities as House members "and not on behalf of groups or individuals outside the House."

Lamoureux notes in the letter that at present there are no rules governing the operation of the Commons printing unit by MPs.

SCARE ATMOSPHERE

According to one MP, the "election scare atmosphere" of recent weeks has at times resulted in a flood of requests for printing and a flood of mail in the Commons post office.

Some of the material, he suggested, was more of a political than parliamentary nature.

Most of the overuse is connected with the free four annual householder mailings given to MPs under recent amendments to the Post Office Act. Some MPs use such mailings to send newsletters or questionnaires to constituents.

Speaker Lamoureux held a meeting with House Leaders on the printing unit problem last Friday. Suggested guidelines from that meeting were then included in a letter sent to the House Leaders early this week, for discussion during party caucuses. At least one party has already discussed the voluntary restrictions this week.

NOT RULES

The first of the propsed guidelines — they would not be rules — would give MPS full responsibility for the contents of routine "newsletters." No authority would be given to House of Commons staff to refuse to print anything contained in such newsletters.

Second, an "essential ingredient" of material reproduced would be that they be "parliamentary in character."

This would restrict material to that "put out by a Member in his capacity as a Member of the House of Commons and not on behalf of groups or individuals outside the House."

ITEMS BARRED

Finally, there would be a bar against House of Commons reproduction of the following types of materials for MPs:

—Publications available through departments of government, Information Canada or from commercial sources.

—Publications under copyright.

—Publications and documents which normally would be made available to supporters of Members either from the national party headquarters or at the constituency level.

This would include solicitations for membership in political associations or constituency associations and, in general, to documents normally produced in the course of an election campaign.

—Official publications of the House and Senate such as Hansard, committee reports and bills.

—Documents containing personal allegations against other Members.

The Speaker, in his letter, notes that some of the guidelines might be unacceptable to MPs and others might be added.

Service Station 'Misunderstanding'

Officials of Gulf Oil Canada Ltd. have asked for a meeting with Victoria city council to clear up what they call "a great deal of misunderstanding" which has arisen over the service station at Scott and Hillside.

The meeting is requested in a letter received at city hall Friday, signed by A. N. Seward, manager, Motorist Market of Gulf Oil, who says the company would appreciate this opportunity to "resolve the differences which appear to have arisen."

The letter is in reply to one from the city following last week's council meeting, where aldermen said the company should be asked to explain why it ignored an undertaking to close down the service station.

Council's understanding is that Gulf gave the assurance when it applied for a rezoning at the nearby Hillside-Shelbourne intersection in order to build a large outlet and service centre.

However, in his letter Seward says that neither at the first meeting with the Advisory Planning Commission nor at the subsequent public hearing in January, 1971, was any such undertaking given.

At the APC meeting, he says, Gulf outlined its overall plan for Victoria which included a proposal to reduce its total number of outlets, subject to getting permission to develop at "certain strategic corners."

"At this point it is conceivable for members attending on behalf of the city to assume that Hillside and Scott would be a natural closure due to its close proximity to Hillside and Shelbourne.

"However, it is the recollection of our representatives at the meeting that there was no discussion regarding the exact number of service stations, nor the locations of stations that would be affected by the rezoning considerations," the letter states.

Seward says a year later the company was informed that the Scott-Hillside station was being rezoned from service station to general commercial use.

In view of the nonconforming zoning, and to fulfil the terms of the lease, the company was "obliged to ensure that this location remained as a service station."

But Seward says the company was unable to find any lessees and had no alternative but to relinquish the lease to the owner, H. B. Sutherland.

Penniless Birthday For Crisis Line

NEED — Crisis Line — could die waiting.

The citizens' volunteer service, which offers help by telephone for anyone in distress without asking their name, will be one year old Wednesday.

Over that year, 6,800 people have sought assistance by dialing 386-6323 at all times of the day and night, seven days a week.

Government grants together with service club and individual donations have met the $2,000-a-month operating expenses so far.

But now the money is gone and appeals to a variety of agencies have NEED travelling in frustrating circles, Mrs. Leah Brown, community relations volunteer, explained Friday.

NEED applied to the intermunicipal committee in January for a grant but a decision was tabled until results of an appeal to the federal Opportunities for Youth program were known.

That federal grant was refused. The intermunicipal committee will reconsider NEED's case later this month.

An appeal to the Canada Assistance Plan brought the response that it would have to await the outcome of the intermunicipal committee's decision.

Meanwhile NEED, which has over 100 volunteers, asked for help from Education Minister Donald Brothers, chairman of the provincial government's council on drug, alcohol and tobacco abuse. There has been no answer yet to last month's letter, said Mrs. Brown.

"May 10 is our birthday and we don't want to die," she said.

NEED's expenses include pay for a full-time co-ordinator, David Stewart, a part-time assistant and a part-time secretary. There are as well bills for rent, heat and light, telephones and office supplies.

Mrs. Brown said NEED is asking people for donations, $1 to $2 to help it over the next month or two while it keeps digging for major financing.

Rhodes Scholar Quits In Political Protest

By BERNARD NOSSITER
The Washington Post

LONDON — Grant Crandall, 24, an earnest American idealist, has become the first Rhodes Scholar in 70 years to resign on political grounds.

Crandall has given up his stipend to study at Oxford, he says, because the selection system reinforces discrimination against blacks in South Africa and Rhodesia and excludes women entirely.

In an impassioned, 900-word letter, he urged the Rhodes Trust to strip the two white-dominated nations of their 12 scholarships and give them to "truly multiracial" nations. He also called for an end to the "gross injustice" and "sexism" that bars women from Rhodes Scholarships.

"I leave with no bitterness towards the Rhodes Trust," Crandall wrote. "I do not think that my values and those promoted by the trust are compatible."

NO RESPONSE

Trust officials, in keeping with the traditional, establishment-oriented nature of the foundation, declined to make any comment. Dr. E. T. Williams, the Trust secretary and pro-vice-chancellor of Oxford, left word with his secretary that he would not speak.

Crandall, from Louisville, Kentucky, has one term to go before completing his two year research project at Oxford on the adaptation of Alabama and Mississippi to the 1965 Voting Rights Act. He intends to finish the year at his own expense, thus giving up about $1,560 dollars of his scholarship.

He is a graduate of Grinnell College in Iowa. A white, he spent one year on a basketball scholarship at Lemoyne-Owen college in Memphis, Tennessee, a black school. This past season, he captained Oxford's undefeated basketball team. Crandall has put in seven months in the peace corps in Lesotho, the African nation surrounded by South Africa.

HIGHLY COVETED

The scholarships are perhaps the most coveted in the English speaking world. They cover room, board and tuition for at least two years at Oxford and are currently worth about $3,900 annually.

About 72 are chosen each year — 32 from the United States, a handful from West Germany and the rest from present and former members of the British Commonwealth.

They were created by Cecil Rhodes, the rich mining magnate, who wanted potential leaders of the English-speaking world stamped with the Oxford impress. Athletic ability, character and leadership qualities are supposed to count even more heavily than intellectual achievement in the selection of scholars.

Perhaps 20 of the 182 Rhodes Scholars now at Oxford have been talking for months about the Rhodesian and South African problem. They made proposals to the Rhodes Trust which have been accepted, including division of Rhodesia's annual quota of three with Zambia, multiracial selection committees and the payment of traveling expenses for needy candidates.

But for Crandall, as he explained in a telephone interview from Oxford, these steps are largely "public relations gestures."

Rhodesia and South Africa, he said, are "racist societies" that prevent blacks from competing equally with whites for the awards.

The first black Rhodesian selected in that country is due to receive a Rhodes Scholarship next year.

The ban on women, Crandall wrote, is "sexism" that is "compatible with the life of Oxford." But it is "especially pernicious at an institution which prides itself on instilling values conducive to moral leadership."

Five Oxford colleges have just announced that they will accept women as well as men students for the first time. To give them Rhodes Scholarships, however, would require changing Cecil Rhodes's will, a step that can be taken by a bill in parliament.

A Fast Curve in the Square

The request of a group of high school students for permission to operate a barrow for the sale of handicrafts in Bastion Square raises a point of principle which is hard to reject. Most members of city council would naturally wish to help the students to collect a little cash and experience during the summer holidays. But the choice of Bastion Square as the scene of their sales efforts was unfortunate.

The rent-paying merchants of the Square are largely dependent on the summer trade to make their year-round operations economically viable. The influx of tourist business in some cases results in the employment of students. But the merchants' concern about competition from barrow salesmen, unhampered by high rent charges, selling some of the same products which the stores carry, is understandable.

It is not a matter of the merchants trying to avoid competition so much as making the competition subject to the same conditions of overhead — and this the handicraft barrow would not be. There is a limit to the revenue to be derived from Bastion Square sales, and permanent firms require all the encouragement they can obtain.

At the same time, a few barrows could add a pleasant feature to the Square — as the now discontinued Barrow Boy venture showed. If students could present a product which did not duplicate existing wares in Bastion Square establishments, they should get a go-ahead from council. But there is no reason why Bastion Square should be the only possible location for their activities. A community of this size should be able to produce a suitable site for such handicraft sales.

One possible project which would enliven Bastion Square and draw potential customers for the nearby shops would be a Saturday morning farmers' market for vegetables, flowers and home-made eatables. Under brightly colored umbrellas and removable stall awnings such an undertaking, reminiscent of the weekly market that once flourished on the present site of Centennial Square, could become an attractive feature of the northern section of Bastion Square, and without creating undue competition for established businesses. It is, in fact, a project which the merchants themselves might encourage.

Another Takeover Bid?

The plea of Washington State Governor Dan Evans to have United States federal funds put into a dozen artificial spawning and incubation channels for sockeye and pinks on the Fraser River reflects a growing American concern about Canadian fisheries policy.

The governor urges presidential support for the $14-million undertaking on British Columbia's chief river and says that it could mean millions to the United States fishing industry. Comparable work under the same two-nations auspices has been done on a shared basis before. Under the existing treaty Canadian and American fishermen fish equally from the stocks entering the Fraser through the Strait of Juan de Fuca.

But Governor Evans now expresses his understanding "that the Canadian fishing industry desires to have the Canadian government assume the total cost of this (Fraser) development in order that Canadians will be entitled to claim the entire enhanced (fish) populations."

That impression is strengthened by the increasing inclination of Canadians to refer to stocks spawned in Canadian rivers as Canadian fish no matter where their travels, once they enter salt water, may take them. There are, of course, certain "historic rights" accorded alien fishermen in Canadian waters where they have fished traditionally — and the chief beneficiaries on the Pacific are American fishermen. The protection apparently afforded by such rights, however, may be less than it seems. No secret has been made of Canadian fishermen's hopes that these rights will be phased out.

Governor Evans' suggestion poses another problem of foreign influence in Canadian resources. Substantial investment in the development of facilities for fish propagation on the Fraser would presumably give American interests a voice in management of the fish run and a perpetual right to a portion of the catch, even in Canadian waters. Apparently a much larger U.S. investment is proposed than that involved in the Hell's Gate rehabilitation years ago. With most of Canada's other resources already dominated by foreign capital, would it be in the long-range interests of Canada to relinquish part of the fishing industry, particularly when this is not financially necessary?

On the other hand, fish from the Fraser, once they are beyond Canadian waters, belong to the fishermen who catch them. Should Canada spend money providing larger catches for foreign boats? Clearly, more information regarding salmon habits on the high seas, and the legalities of national jurisdiction, is required. What must not be lost sight of is that there should be international control of deep-sea fishing in order to ensure that the species will not be wiped out.

Showing the Gun

While various Arab nations flex their lingual muscles and talk of the inevitability of war against Israel, in Tel Aviv military authorities have conducted an interesting exercise. Its purpose, obviously, was to show the potential belligerents the gun.

New equipment, a special plane, a battle tank and a self-propelled gun have added striking power to Israeli armaments. These, with other equipment, the Israelis point out, will permit strikes much further afield than in previous hostilities.

There may be a certain cynicism in the expressed hope that "their vastly increased firepower would act as a deterrent to war altogether and would spare us (the Israelis) a test of their efficiency in actual battle." The message to the more bellicose Arabs is clear: Israel is saying "We haven't been sleeping."

We Think We Have Troubles...

CLEVELAND: Cleveland city council recently gave approval to a plan to borrow nearly $10 millions through the issuance of bonds.

It was not just another city government decision. It was a sharp departure from established city financial procedures. It was passed by a council confronting a situation bleak and getting bleaker. And passage of the measure meant bringing together factions whose divisions have often blocked badly-needed action and have helped make Cleveland as good an example as any of a city weighed down by the problems of urban America.

The evidence of crisis is omnipresent. An editorial in the Cleveland Plain Dealer begins thus: "People out in Ward 30, aroused by rape, robbery, burglary, shoplifting, vandalism, shooting, noise, nudity and rough stuff, have had to organize their own volunteer police force . . ."

A private police force is a well-established part of life in the University Circle area, which takes in many of the city's prestigious cultural institutions and Case-Western Reserve University.

"No-Man's Land"

The area adjoins Hough, a poor and black district of crumbling houses and vacant lots. In matter-of-fact tones, students describe Hough as "a no-man's land," which a white enters at night in peril of his life. (They add that it is equally dangerous for a black to venture at night into the nearby Italian-American enclave.) They talk of the decline of downtown night life as suburbanites have written it off as too dangerous.

A television newscaster reports on a book which mentions the Cleveland city police force. The author, a well-known eastern police chief, has written of a decline in discipline such as to be "a danger to public safety."

It is at best possible here only to sketch the background to this, with the aid of the observations of a knowledgeable Cleveland journalist. Clearly there is a need to improve the policing picture,

MAYOR CARL STOKES
. . . $11-million deficit

but — instead — there have been police layoffs. The city administration should be thinking of large scale rehabilitation of decaying areas, but it is instead scraping for money simply to prevent further erosion of existing services.

The mayor's office has a new occupant, Ralph Perk. He succeeded the city's first black mayor, Carl Stokes. Mr. Stokes left office leaving behind a projected 1972 deficit of over $11 million. It reflected the fact that Mr. Stokes had budgeted on the basis of tax increases which were not sustained. A contributing factor was the view held by city whites that a black mayor wanted more money which would benefit blacks.

Mr. Perk, who had campaigned on an anti-tax platform, thus had to deal with a severe financial crisis piled on top of the standard urban problems. To ease immediate pressures, he arranged to defer, between March and September, 10 per cent of the pay of almost 10,000 city employees. He then drew up a plan for large-scale borrowing — a plan which had no precedent in the state of Ohio. With special approval from the state government, the money was to be borrowed to meet current needs, rather than for capital expenditures as always before.

Divisions Reflected

The borrowing scheme was duly submitted to a city council reflecting the divisions of the city: the division between black and non-black areas and the divisions between neighborhoods with different national roots — Irish, German, Slovenian, etc.

As the white councilmen had looked with suspicion on a black mayor, so the black councilmen look with suspicion at developments under a white mayor. The council's capacity to act is in doubt unless there is a majority coalition in which the black members join with a group of whites despite their suspicions.

The backing of such a coalition ensured approval of the borrowing scheme. But the coalition remains precarious. And very large questions about Cleveland's future remain.

What Makes the Product?

They say that the best evidence of a university's standards is its finished product — the graduate. Graduates, being individuals, have varying capacities for achievement of excellence. Some have developed high capabilities in inferior schools simply because they had the inherent moxy. Others have been duds in classes of high merit and later emerged as efficient and distinguished persons. Wasn't it Churchill who had little Latin and less Greek? Wasn't there some difficulty with a branch of mathematics in Einstein's formal courses as a student?

So there's no absolute guarantee of success for a young person of better than average intelligence who receives instruction in a high quality school. There seems, however, to be a correlation between the quality of the university and the quality of the product. To make the comparison ridiculous, you expect more from Oxford, Cambridge or Harvard than you do from Borstal.

So what makes the difference?

To a substantial degree, given normal students, it could be the professors. While the old idiom that if the child hasn't learned, the teacher hasn't taught is too generalized, it's true enough to say that a good teacher can stimulate learning for even a relatively dull student. For a bright one, he can light a torch.

Scholar, Teacher

A top-notch scholar (include scientist in that definition) does not necessarily make a top-notch teacher. It can help, though, if the teacher knows what he's talking about and has mastered the techniques of approaching problems in ways that promise advances toward solutions — and if he can transmit some of that capacity to his students. For such accomplishments, professors gain wide-ranging recognition and reputation.

Which may lend some significance to the off-season activities of University of Victoria personnel. Some receive invitations to speak to learned societies. Some leave on fellowships granted on their proven abilities to pursue deeper studies in specialized fields. Some engage their energies in the production of books and treatises on their researches.

This year Dr. W. R. Derrick Sewell, of UVic's department of geography, whose committee work on the internationalization prospects for the Mekong River was carried out under United Nations auspices, has been invited to deliver a keynote speech in France this month on the Canadian and French approach to water pollution control. In transit, he was also to deliver a talk in England for the Royal Geographic Society on water control.

In a far different field, Herbert Huxley, former head of the department of classics, is reading favorable reviews in classical journals on his "pleasant book" for Latinate readers.

Dr. John L. Climenhaga, former dean of arts and science taking a sabbatical, was asked to contribute to discussions of the American Astronomical Society.

Dr. Howard L. Biddulph, of the political science department, has accepted appointment as book review editor and member of the executive board of editors of Canadian-American Slavic Studies, and will, himself, publish a paper in the Western Political Quarterly on "Soviet Intellectual Dissent as a Political Counter-Culture."

Early in August Dr. John Downing, of the Faculty of Education, will present a paper at the World Congress on Reading in Buenos Aires — an honor that reflects his position in studies of the initial teaching alphabet.

Dr. Cary Goulson, Faculty of Education, for five years chairman of the Arts and Science Symposium at the university, goes to the British Museum to research the period of British rule in Canada, and later undertake extensive travel in Europe.

Recognition

These are samples of the activities of professors at the University of Victoria which reflect their recognition in wide educational fields — forms of tribute for work well done. There are others. There have been many in years past and there will be more in years to come. They contribute to the standards set for higher education here, demonstrating by the assessments of other scholars and specialists of international repute some of the human resources involved in building the university's honest status.

What does this do for the product of the university — the graduate?

No certain answer can be given. Much depends on the ability of the teacher to impart his knowledge and attitude and the ability of the student to absorb them.

But at least it suggests that at Gordon Head are men and women whose capacities are respected internationally. They help to build the university beyond the components of bricks, stone, mortar and wood on the campus.

A Nature Ramble With Skipper

FREEMAN KING

As you hike along the River Trail at Goldstream Park campsite, dropping down close to the stream, you can see how the power of rushing water has moved a huge log and almost washed away a small island that was in the middle of the river.

Along the bank there are many ferns, including the sword, lady, maidenhair and the fascinating deer fern. This last fern will tell you that you are now walking over boggy soil, for it only grows in this medium.

Other marshland plants can be found, such as the arum lily and hedge nettle, which is not a nettle and belongs to the mint family. Here the thimbleberry abounds and you may notice the smell of the stink currant that grows here. It often is associated with the salmonberry.

On the upper banks you may identify the pyrole by its distinctive thick, dark green leaves that cluster at the base of the plant. Its flowers are pinkish and wax-like. It belongs to the heather family.

Here also is found the tall fringe cup with its yellow-green flower on one side of the stem. The leaves are heavily lobed and the stems are hairy.

You may find some of the wild ginger that has an inconspicuous flower, bell-shaped and with wide-spreading lobes. The leaves are heart-shaped and thick. Growing with them will be the lily-of-the-valley, whose white spike of flowers is now in bloom. Note how the leaf curls on one side of the base.

As you walk along the cutbank, look for the spreading waxberry. It has rather inconspicuous flowers and does not grow into such large clumps as the taller variety.

There are a few Saskatoon berry shrubs along the way. You will be able to tell them by the "saw-toothed" edges at the top of the leaves. This particular species does not have the large, delicious fruit of the variety grown in the interior or the prairies.

Around the bend you come to several western yew trees. Later on, in the summer, you will be able to find the pinkish droop, or berry, on some of the trees. They are poisonous. This species has the male and female blossoms on different trees.

The snags along the trail are the homes of many kinds of insects and are also feeding stations of the woodpeckers. The old holes are nesting sites for several kinds of our small feathered friends.

You can now look down into the deep pools of the river where the water is clear and clean. This is the home of the tiny coho fingerlings and all fishing in this portion of the river is prohibited.

Answers from Space

In a short "Moon Rocks" letter, one of your readers points out the cost of the magnificent flight of Apollo 16, as if everything should be measured in dollars and cents.

Besides the scientific value of this expedition in so far as the knowledge of the universe is concerned, from a practical point of view we must be thankful that there are brave men ready to risk their lives by landing on a distant satellite for the benefit of all mankind.

Already the space program has provided the answer to immediate communication via satellites — thus the improvement in hurricane and earthquake warnings that have saved hundreds, thousands of human beings. Already the technique of space suits worn by astronauts has provided surgeons around the operating table with head-gear and gowns entirely germ-free — thus eliminating the possibility of infection of patients enduring long and complicated operations, when wounds are openly exposed for two hours or more. Already countless discoveries in the field of medicine, nutrition, etc. have been made as results of the space program.

And the entire world is better for it. When we think of the fabulous amount of money spent in making deadly weapons of war, weapons that often become obsolete before being used, the millions which will be spent to repair our damaged environment, our polluted waters, our impoverished national resources — the cost of the space program is a real "bargain" and a great, glorious one; a shining proof that in spite of his dismal failures man is still a creature of intelligence, foresight and even genius. — E. 'The Boy Scout of B.C. Politics'

By FRANK RUTTER
The Sun

(This review of Pat McGeer's new book on B.C. politics was written before his resignation this week as leader of the provincial Liberal party. Rutter is a former legislative reporter for the Times.)

McGEER
. . . still has faith

On Feb. 20, 1963, I interviewed a freshman member of the legislature who was to make his maiden speech in a few days. He had arrived glowing from a smashing byelection victory the previous December in Vancouver Point Grey. What did he think of this place? "I'm really impressed," he said. "It's even better than I thought."

After nine sessions in that legislature, Patrick McGeer's verdict is that it is "a place of bitterness and irresponsibility."

"Political morality in any true sense cannot be said to exist in British Columbia today," he says in his book Politics in Paradise, to be published May 13.

Nine years ago, as we listened to the bright maiden speech of the member for Point Grey, we were impressed by his sincerity, but we feared for his naivete.

Reading Politics in Paradise, there will be many today impressed by this man's qualities — and his naivete. For they will see him as the Boy Scout of B.C. politics.

How are we to take this book? It is a political document, by a practising politician.

But is it his swan song, his admission of defeat? He confesses that " . . . in my darker moments I have to wonder whether British Columbians have not become so cynical about the political process as to have lost all concern for its institutions . . ."

Is it his vindication for being misunderstood by an ungrateful electorate and an insensitive press?

Certainly one of McGeer's reasons for writing this book was to get his view of history on record. Substantially, it is a straight view, as rewritten from the files of the newpapers that covered it. Today's news is tomorrow's fly ash.

This part of the book, its bulk, is much as those who wrote the news will remember it. There is nothing really new or sensational in it. There is very little intimate anecdote. The peregrinations of P. A. Gaglardi. The Sommers case. Cypress Bowl. The B.C. Electric takeover and the two-river policy. Dear Hal. Poor Al. The nonpartisan bank. Commonwealth Trust. The chronic ailments of the hospital system. Low-graded education. The adventures of the Gaglardi boys. And events more recent that are subject to a court's scrutiny at this very moment. It's all here.

There are a few sloppy errors. Arthur Laing was not leader of the Liberal party in 1965. It was Tilly Rolston, not Ralston; Alex Matthew, not Matthews . . . and so on.

The question is: What impact will all this regurgitated material, set out as it never could be in a daily newspaper, have on the lay reader who may have caught only snatches of the events, or missed them altogether? He would have to be dismayed, for Dr. McGeer is, as I said, highly subjective.

Then there is the manifesto. The author cannot forego a little evangelism on each major topic: his plan for education and hospital financing, elimination of referendums and abolition of taxation on things to provide services to people; his concept of a science city at the University of B.C.; his criteria for resource development — cost, conservation and environment, in equal measures; his vision of a new city of Vancouver, with rapid transit and broad boulevards; his program for electoral reforms.

You can't really fault this. Most of it was Liberal party policy in the last election, for instance. The only thing wrong with it was that it didn't win the election. This is puzzling, and it puzzled Dr. McGeer.

Why can't nice guys finish first?

And here we get to the nub of the book, its most penetrating insight. This is Dr. McGeer's concept of political power and how it is won in B.C. This is politics in paradise, as lush as the very words of the title.

One of the most striking passages of the book is the story of the corruption of one man's political soul. Bill Rathie was elected mayor of Vancouver on a strong platform of reform and civic development. He was the first mayor to fight the machine in Victoria on its own ground, in its own language. For nine glorious months Rathie jabbed and counterpunched — and scored. Then he was persuaded to run in the 1963 provincial election as a Liberal.

He conducted a strangely muted campaign and lost. "It was the end of his initiative," says Dr. McGeer. Within four months he was praising the provincial government, within two years he was endorsing his arch-foe Robert Bonner in a byelection, and within four more he was actually a Socred candidate himself.

Others came and went, sacrifices in the temple of Mammon: John Barfoot Macdonald, president of the University of B.C. and architect of a great blueprint for higher education. Dr. Kenneth Hare, his successor, who had one semester of confrontation politics and fled.

"They have been humbled by power," says the author, "not just the political kind, but the electrical kind as well." For, after a decade of intensive highway-building, the government had turned its attention to dam-building, and the huge pension, trust and special surplus funds that could have been poured into social services were swallowed up by the power ego; more than $1 billion out of $1.7 billion.

What is the political power of W. A. C. Bennett over paradise? What destroyed such men as Rathie, Macdonald and Hare?

It is like that of Huey Long, Chicago Mayor Richard Daley, or Maurice Duplessis, says Dr. McGeer.

". . . Bennett's guideline is whether a given action will improve his chances to stay in power, and his government survived not only the Sommers incident but many lesser ones as well."

The author sees "the complete unwillingness of Bennett to place integrity or any other traditional political value above loyalty to himself or his government."

He has found the formula for power. It was learned by the Coalition, that wretched alliance of Liberals and Conservatives that got its comeuppance from the man who discovered the secret, W. A. C. Bennett. "It did not depend on excellence of government, nor on dynamic policies. It depended and still depends on a commitment to keep the socialists from the government."

B.C.'s tradition of extremes, as he calls it, puzzles Dr. McGeer, too. Yet "keep out the socialists" has been Premier Bennett's mandate for re-election in every instance.

Dr. McGeer concedes that the verdict of the common man will be that, "lucky or not, W. A. C. Bennett has provided better than adequate leadership for B.C."

"But that leaves one thing out. It leaves out the dreadful record of what has been happening during the years to the political institutions in British Columbia."

He adds: "It is not just the way that ministerial indiscretions and misdeeds have been excused or openly defended. It is rather the over-all degrading of the political process."

★ ★ ★

Dr. McGeer concludes on the optimistic note that the damage he sees is not irreparable. He believes in the decency of the common voter. He thinks there is a recognition for principle. He has faith that the centre can hold, and be, again, the political highway, that the old ethics are still valid.

He may be right. But the institutions he would refurbish may be beyond repair. They are being challenged not only here but everywhere, for what generations of politicians have done to them.

The WASP Syndrome

CANADIAN JEWISH NEWS
An Editorial

In a supposedly enlightened community, the dialogue that took place in a Toronto court made shocking reading.

Justice of the Peace Lorne Taylor failed dismally to live up to the high standards we have set for those who sit in judgment on their fellow men when he belittled a defendant's Moslem faith in a traffic court trial.

Admittedly, a justice of the peace is on the low rung of the judicial ladder, but when he speaks in his official capacity, he bears the same responsibility for his conduct as a Supreme Court judge. And that responsibility is to administer justice with an even hand, to make sure justice is is not only done but is seen to be done and to give an accused all the protection the law provides.

This Mr. Taylor failed to do, and his failure has been a disservice to the judical system, to the community as a whole, and to Saleh Izreig, the immigrant from Palestine who had the misfortune to appear before him on a minor traffic charge.

The WASP syndrome was much in evidence during the disgraceful browbeating Mr. Izreig was subjected to in the name of justice. This assumption of religious and racial superiority has largely vanished since the Second World War, but the shabby courtroom incident is a sharp reminder that vestiges remain.

The merits of the case — whether Mr. Izreig was guilty as charged — are immaterial. What is material is that a citizen was treated with contempt and his religion belittled. The verbatim transcript of the evidence in the case had all the more stunning impact for not being a journalist's version of what transpired.

It was there in all its ugly starkness; the damning of the Moslem faith, the insulting language and demeanor towards a non-Christian who thought enough of this country to take out Canadian citizenship. The transcript told the shameful story of a law officer whose attitude marked him unfit for his task as a dispenser of justice.

We who belong to the Jewish faith know from long experience that religious and racial prejudice exists, that most minorities suffer to some extent from this malaise in social, educational and economic fields. But we do not expect to find a judge affected by this sickness. In all fairness it must be said that Canadians are fortunate in the calibre of the men who occupy the benches in our courts and incidents such as the case involving Mr. Izreig are rare.

Public and official reaction to this sorry episode was swift. There was an outburst of indignation, in which Jewish bodies took part, and Attorney General Dalton Bales said he would recommend to cabinet that Mr. Taylor be dismissed.

●

The Izreig case illustrates the importance of a free, independent and vigilant press in a society where the rights and liberties of the individual are frequently subjected to unjust treatment. Had it not been for the enterprise of The Globe and Mail in obtaining the court transcript and breaking the story on its front page, the shabby incident might never have seen the light of day. An obvious injustice would have gone unremedied.

BALES
. . . takes action

A review of the system used to appoint justices of the peace might well be undertaken by the government. Obviously, the methods presently employed must be seriously questioned.

After awarding a bouquet to The Globe and Mail, we also believe a brickbat is in order. The press has long fought for the freedom to inform, but the body made up of Canada's newspaper publishers, evidently believes the freedom to inform is for others, not for themselves.

The Canadian Daily Newspaper Publishers Association, of which The Globe and Mail is a member, bars the press from most of its meetings with the thin excuse that really, nothing of interest happens at the sessions.

The publishers might study the Izreig case with profit. Freedom of the press is not a divisible concept.

HEALTHY MIND, HEALTHY BODY?

By DEV MURARKA

MOSCOW — The Yakuts, a people living in the far east of the Soviet Union, eat much fatty food, but according to the Russian heart specialist, Professor Evgeny Chazov, they suffer far less arteriosclerosis than Russians and Ukrainians living in the same region.

From this the professor concludes that there is no case for condemning wholesale the food habits of peoples which do not conform to the dietary habits of medically-educated countries.

Professor Chazov, who is deputy Minister of Health for the U.S.S.R., accepts that the human body develops its own protective measures against such diets, but he attaches great importance to the nerve factor in causing heart diseases, and argues that we have civilized ourselves out of one useful cure.

In the barbaric old days situations of human stress found expression in physical counter-action; a frightened man would run away or fight to defend himself. Both actions relaxed the nervous system. But now society requires that we suppress such crude reactions, and this leaves a mark on the organism.

Still, the professor has a remedy. A "good upbringing" he declares, "will enable us to control our emotions correctly. The spirit of comradeship, respect for people one associates with, love of work, a cheerful and optimistic world outlook and moral stability — all these are not only tasks for developing a Communist relationship between people, but also an earnest of a healthy generation."

It sounds curiously like the homily Victorian fathers might have been giving their children in capitalistic Britain while Karl Marx, at the British Museum, was sweating out his thesis that the main thing the capitalistic system contained within itself was the seeds of its own decay.

Clock and Calendar Magic

RUSSELL BAKER

Daylight saving time is an act of magic. One instant it is 2 o'clock in the morning and — abracadabra — the next it is 3 o'clock in the morning. An entire hour has been made to vanish. Science cannot justify it; logic cannot explain it; farmers cannot tolerate it. But there is the fact nevertheless. For one entire hour no one has been born and no one has died. No one has made a fortune, no one lost a love.

Two a.m., breaking every rule required to keep the universe in orderly running condition, simply and instantly turned into 3 a.m. magic.

This is an exciting demonstration of what we can do when we really want to rise above science, constricting regulations and rules of the universe; because the magic behind daylight saving time is nothing more mysterious than a general human agreement that men are more important than clocks. Because we don't like what the clock tells us we take the clock in hand and, using physical force, make the clock tell us something more to our liking.

"We are tired of it being dark at 7:30 in the evening on these sweet days of spring," we say to the clock. "When the days are as good as this we want them to last longer."

★ ★ ★

"Tick tock," replies the clock, smug in its scientific exactitude, immutability and sense of representing inescapable rule and universal order.

"Clock," we say, "we are man! When woman and man want sweet spring's light to last beyond 7:30 in the evening, they cannot be frustrated by officious clocks." A quick hand on the hands, and the magic is done. Though the night has advanced not at all, it is suddenly 8:30 p.m.

The pity is that this instance of man's taking charge of his own destiny is so rare, for the principle of daylight saving time could be used widely to make life more humane in many areas where life is at present barely tolerable.

Why not, for example, wave the wand and abolish the hour between 1 and 2 p.m. of each weekday? The gain in human happiness, as well as sobriety, would be incalculable. This is the hour traditionally occupied by the start of the business lunch, a dreadful ritual in which, to transact three minutes of business, men have to sit 2½ hours in a darkened restaurant struggling, each, to seem more vital than the other. An hour magically cropped out of the day at this point would surely work magic for the gross national product.

It would also be a boon to school children, for it is the hour immediately after lunch when the future hope of America is barely educable, what with drowsiness caused by healthy young digestion and the grim knowledge that the school day still has two hours to run.

The deducted hour could be restored magically at 7 a.m., at which time the women of America (men on Mondays, Wednesday, Fridays and alternate Sundays in liberated households) would turn off the alarm, reset the clock to 6 a.m. and take another hour of sleep.

Applications of the magic need not be confined to the clock. It can be made to work with the calendar, too. Would it not be delightful if at midnight on the 31st of January we all went to the calendar, tore off February and immediately entered the month of March?

People born in February and skiers would probably object. Some people like February. Well, some people like standard time all summer long, too, and for those people certain areas of the United States are reserved, areas in which daylight saving time is not allowed. The same provision could be made for those who want to keep February where it is.

Several mountains in Vermont, the city of Buffalo and a large tract of northern Minnesota would still go from January into February; the rest of us would be able to say, at midnight, Jan. 31: "Only three more weeks until spring!"

The removed month of February would be put back, naturally, but at a place where it would improve life for the generality of humanity. The ideal spot would be immediately after the month of August, so that children might say at August's end, "Only one more month until school begins" and that women might have another four weeks respite from football.

In times of political drudgery a race habituated to rearranging time by magic would be especially fortunate. How sweet if tomorrow we could all awake, peel four years off the calendar, and thus make the politicians who so depressed us last night four years older, tireder, maybe even wiser. We would have to put those four years back in somewhere later, of course. But not too soon. Maybe in the 21st century, if the war is over then.

When I find the man, I'll steer him to Birks for the diamond."

"I'll keep the man-hunt details to myself. But I'll share what I've learned about diamonds.

I comparative-shopped a bundle of diamond dealers. And do you think I could find out if and why a diamond was worth the price on the tag? Not really.

Then I found that Birks has diamonds of different qualities . . . with a guarantee that you get exactly the quality you pay for. I talked $400, a nice round figure. And for that I could choose from a range of qualities and sizes. Smaller ones as perfect as you can get. And bigger ones of lesser quality. I couldn't tell the difference and neither could you.

Psychiatrists Describe War's Hidden Casualties

By STUART AUERBACH
The Washington Post

DALLAS — One man feels terror-stricken among friends; he fears they may turn on him. Another automatically walks on the inside of paths in a New York park so the "hostiles" won't see him. Countless others sit silently in their rooms, refusing to work or see friends.

They are the hidden casualties of the Vietnam war as described here by a panel of psychiatrists. They are soldiers who appeared healthy when they left combat, but suffered serious emotional upheavals after returning home.

"Recently it has become increasingly clear," former army psychiatrist Carl Segal told the American Psychiatric Association, "that there have been delayed emotional and behavioral reactions to combat experiences."

Dr. Marcus Stuen reported that his studies at the Veterans' Administration Hospital in Tacoma, Wash., show "a rather dramatic increase in the inability (of the Vietnam veteran) to adjust to civilian life."

He noted that increasing numbers of "young, acutely disturbed" veterans began flooding the VA hospitals in late 1968. Most of them had suffered no emotional breakdowns while in Vietnam or other overseas posts. They were hospitalized after their discharge from the service.

"The veterans of the Indo-Chinese war bear a heavier burden than those of the Second World War, "Dr. Arthur Sackler told a session here on the problems of returning veterans at a meeting of the American Association for Social Psychiatry.

"Second World War veterans returned as heroes to a highly motivated society united in its goals. The Vietnam veteran of today returns to a splintered society which has either repudiated the war or rejected its consequences. The Vietnam veteran returns not a victor but a victim. He therefore feels apart from the rest of society to a greater extent than the veterans of previous wars."

The army claims a lower rate of psychiatric illness in Vietnam than in any previous war.

That may be true, said Segal, but he questioned whether the army paid enough attention "to the more subtle behavioral and emotional effects of this unpopular war and of military service during an era of rapidly changing social concerns and priorities."

Dr. Jonathan Borus, a psychiatrist at Walter Reed Army Institute of Research in Washington, also questioned whether the army was providing the proper psychiatric care for Vietnam veterans who performed well in combat but broke down upon returning home.

Despite the reports by the army and VA psychiatrists, Dr. Marc Musser, the chief medical officer for the veterans' administration, said there is "little evidence of delayed psychiatric illness."

He acknowledged, however, that "most servicemen find the hostile components of their reception upon returning home to be quite disturbing, but it apparently does not significantly affect their emotional stability."

Ownership Policy In New Budget?

By STEWART MacLEOD

OTTAWA (CP) — Predictions about the contents of Monday night's federal budget include speculation that it will represent phase two of this week's foreign ownership statement.

The commonest guess is that there will be broad incentives for more domestic investment.

Another popular prediction is for corporation tax cuts, designed to perk up the economy and make more jobs.

Speculation about further efforts to increase Canadian participation in the ownership of the economy is fuelled by the relatively-limited action announced this week.

The government announced in its long-awaited foreign-ownership statement Tuesday that the takeover of certain Canadian firms would be subject to cabinet approval.

OPPOSITION CRITICAL

There was heavy opposition criticism about the lack of investment incentives.

"We want more Canadian participation in, and ownership of, the Canadian economy," said Conservative Leader Robert Stanfield. "Today's statement is tragically short of what is required."

New Democrat Leader David Lewis had the same criticism. "There is in Canada a great deal of available capital for investment by Canadians. . . . The report ought to have indicated positive proposals for increasing control of the Canadian economy by Canadians."

Similar comments came from several provincial premiers, including Ontario Premier William Davis, who suggested the statement should have been accompanied by tax incentives.

Cabinet ministers appeared to respond to the criticism with a smiling, wait-and-see attitude. And one government official remarked, "Let's see what happens in the next week or so."

NOTE TIMING

Sources say it was no coincidence that the government statement dealing with foreign ownership came just six days before Monday's budget. And they say the cabinet fully expected to hear criticism about the lack of incentives to encourage Canadian investment.

"The timing would be perfect," said one official, in relation to possible budget announcements of investment incentives.

Finance Minister John Turner has a wide variety of options to choose from in complementing the takeover legislation, and no one is predicting the exact form of incentives. But government sources say that in this pre-election budget, as the country is pre-occupied with the whole question of foreign investment, any such incentives would probably be as popular as tax cuts.

The sources also predict that the budget will be followed by other government steps relating to foreign investment.

QUALITY FIRST—PICARD

TORONTO (CP) Laurent Picard, newly named to the presidency of the CBC, states his priorities in simple terms: first, to improve the quality of CBC programming.

"And it will be my second, third and fourth priority, too," he said to an interviewer Friday during a visit here, a few hours after his appointment was announced by Prime Minister Trudeau. It becomes effective Aug. 1.

He promised an administration which would stress better internal human relations.

Asked about the costly Jalna series which has been condemned by some critics, Mr. Picard said: "I would rather have liked that you didn't ask that question. We have to have our Edsel."

Asked whether the promise to make 14 more instalments of Jalna was not a major error, he said:

"This error is not made yet. I'm not saying it's not going to be made but it's not made yet. I don't think we're committed to it."

The CBC has made 12 instalments of Jalna but sold a package of 26 to Thames Television of Britain, apparently committing the network to complete the remaining 14, which are scheduled to start on the CBC next January.

Mr. Picard also implied in a CBC-TV interview that the network might soon cancel all advertising on radio and take a hard look at advertisements on children's TV. Asked about the possibility of cancellation of ads on both radio and TV, he said:

"Not at this stage. I know that there's worry about the effect of advertising on children's programming, and this might be a thing that we'd have to consider in the not-too-distant future. The commercial policy on radio might be reviewed at this time."

Mr. Picard spent 90 minutes Friday with pickets of the National Association of Broadcast Employees and Technicians in front of CBC headquarters here. The strike began with a series of rotating walkouts Jan. 22.

He expressed sympathy for the strikers and said he hoped negotiations could be speeded up but also said he was "against featherbedding and for job security," a reference to the crucial point of whether NABET members should continue to do jobs which with modern equipment might be done by program producers.

Teachers Seek Tri-Party Rule

Times Staff

VANCOUVER — The president of the B.C. Teachers Federation told the province's school trustees Friday that a three-sided partnership is needed in B.C. to properly educate children.

Adam Robertson told the convention of the B.C. School Trustees Association, being held at the Bayshore Hotel, that "the problems of education can only be solved if and when we see fit to establish a viable partnership among these bodies entrusted with the task of educating our children" — the BCTF, BCSTA and provincial department of education.

Robertson urged that the three groups co-operate as much as possible but remain "performing differentiated functions."

"In my opinion, B.C. is without a viable educational partnership. The potential partners tend to react to the unilateral actions of one another.

Discipline Follows Hoax

NEW YORK (AP) — The New York Stock Exchange announced Friday disciplinary action against 10 brokerage house employees, including four vice-presidents, for allowing a Philadelphia college student to order $200,000 in stock by telephone without putting up any cash.

The exchange said its investigation was continuing and it expected "additional charges will be issued in the near future."

The exchange said censures, suspensions of five days to five months and fines totalling $8,750 had been meted out to brokerage employees who let Abraham Treff, 19, make transactions without ever appearing in their offices or signing papers opening accounts.

Treff said his activities were prompted by a discussion with friends of the effectiveness of consumer crusader Ralph Nader. He said his transactions, which yielded no profit, were intended to show brokers were more concerned about commission earnings than in the persons placing orders.

Treff's disclosure of the hoax last January embarrassed the exchange and the securities industry even though only six of the 25 brokerage representatives the youth called opened accounts for him.

B.C. to Get New Prison

TORONTO (CP) — Penitentiaries Commissioner Paul Faguy said Wednesday night that if everything goes according to plan, a new maximum-security prison will be in operation in British Columbia by 1975.

The penitentiary would implement the living-unit concept recommended recently to the government by a committee established to look into the maximum-security prison situation.

THE BIGGEST SELLING SMALL CAR IN EUROPE VS. THE BIGGEST SELLING SMALL CAR IN AMERICA

This year, millions of Americans and Canadians will go out to buy their very first small car.

Many will find themselves confused as to which small car is best.

Which is why we think it might be helpful for you to know that in Europe, where they've been comparing small cars for three generations, they buy more Fiats than anything else.

Volkswagens included.

One of the big reasons for this is the Fiat 128, which we're bringing to North America for the first time this year.

OUR PERFORMANCE VERSUS THEIR PERFORMANCE.

The most obvious difference between the Fiat 128 and the Volkswagen Super Beetle is the engine.

Ours is in front—theirs is in back. We have front wheel drive—they have rear wheel drive.

Front wheel drive gives you better handling because the wheels that are moving the car are also the wheels that are turning the car.

Front wheel drive also gives you better traction on ice and snow. (As proof, last year, the Fiat 128 won the Canadian Winter Rally, which is run over ice and snow the likes of which we hardly ever see on Vancouver Island.)

You'll also notice, if you glance at the chart on the right, that under passing conditions the Fiat accelerates faster than the Volkswagen. (If you've ever passed a giant truck on a highway, you know how important that is.)

The Fiat 128—which has self-adjusting front disc brakes—can bring you to a complete stop in a shorter distance than the Volkswagen, which does not have disc brakes.

The Fiat 128 has rack and pinion steering, which is a more positive kind of steering system generally found on such cars at Ferraris, Porsches and Jaguars. The Volkswagen doesn't.

OUR ROOM VERSUS THEIR ROOM.

The trouble with most of the small cars around is that while they help solve the serious problem of space on the road, they create a serious problem of space inside the car.

And while the Volkswagen is far from the worst offender in this area, it still doesn't give you anywhere near the amount of space you get in the Fiat 128.

As you can see on the measurement chart, the Fiat 128 is a full 10 inches shorter on the outside than the Volkswagen. Yet it has more room on the inside than an Oldsmobile Cutlass, let alone the Volkswagen.

Compared to the Super Beetle, it's wider in front, wider in back, and 5 inches wider between the front and back seat. Which should be good news for your knees.

And in the trunk of the Fiat 128, where lack of room is taken for granted in small cars, you'll find 13 cubic feet of room. In the Volkswagen you'll find 9.2.

OUR COST VERSUS THEIR COST.

Aside from the fact that the Fiat 128 costs $255 less than the Super Beetle, there's another cost advantage we're rather proud of.

According to tests run by the North American Testing Company, the Fiat 128 gets better gas mileage than the Super Beetle.

Now we don't for one minute expect that, even in the face of all the aforementioned evidence, you will rush out and buy a Fiat. All we suggest is that you take the time to look at a Fiat.

Recently, the president of Volkswagen of America was quoted as saying that 42% of all the people who buy Volkswagens have never even looked at another kind of car.

And we think that people who don't look before they buy never know what they've missed.

Manpower-Short Navy to Miss Swiftsure

By PAT DUFOUR
Times Staff

The protective presence of the Canadian navy will not be on hand three weeks from today when Swiftsure yachts pace it out in the annual classic.

This will be the first time in many years that naval vessels have been unavailable to patrol the course and act as starting and rounding boats.

Race officials have been told that "operational and training commitments" make it impossible for the ships to take part.

The U.S. coast guard will come to the rescue by providing two cutters and our own coast guard will have one or two cutters on hand.

Two power cruisers from the Royal Victoria Yacht Club, Gerry Williams' Shellmar and Bob Smith's Scot Free, will act as rounding marks at Clallam Bay for the smaller boats competing in the 75.6-mile Juan de Fuca race.

An American coast guard vessel will act as the mark on Swiftsure Bank for yachts competing in the 136.2-mile Swiftsure. She will also act as the starting boat when the two races get under way off Brotchie Ledge Sunday, May 27 at 9:30 and 9:45 a.m.

ORIOLE BACK

Due to the enthusiasm of the Esquimalt Squadron, Canadian Forces Sailing Association, the navy's 21-foot ketch Oriole will be back in action this year.

Like her armed sister ships this year, Oriole had to miss Swiftsure 1971 because of insufficient manpower.

This year, with the blessing of Rear-Admiral Richard Leir, she will be raced by CFSA volunteers with Lieut. bob Bissell, CFSA fleet captian, as her skipper.

Hunter says all kinds of people have been "responding beautifully" to appeals for help in getting the Oriole in sailing trim.

Volunteers have helped restore her rigging and trace down sails and gear, stowed ashore since she was "grounded."

Bissell plans to have a "dry run" aboard Oriole this weekend, in preparation for her first working-up routines afloat next weekend.

'A LOT OF BOAT'

Bissell and the other volunteers will be out practicing the whole week before Swiftsure.

He has no illusions about the task ahead.

"She's a lot of boat to handle and takes a lot of muscle. But there's a vast amount of expertise among the crew. We have some ex-Oriole types as well as men who have sailed the Pickle."

(The Pickle is the navy's 56-foot yawl on the east coast, still in use as a training ship.)

Bissell is hoping for a repeat of last year's wind conditions at the start of Swiftsure, when 35-knot gales and angry seas knocked 44 boats out of the race, several with broken masts.

The Non-such, full-scale model of the Hudson's Bay's vessel that probed Canadian waterways in 1668, will be used as the base for the Friday evening activities.

She will also be among the armada of well-wishers off the Victoria coastline that will be on hand when the competitors get their start gun the following morning.

Entries, already coming in, may top the record 191 of 1971. Deadline is May 22.

New Epic Planned By Veteran Ford

NEW YORK (NYT) — There's a Ford in your future, and we're delighted to say it's John Ford. The 77-year-old veteran, who has directed well over a hundred films since 1917, gruffly acknowledged from the West Coast that he will soon be coasting west to Monument Valley, the scene of so many of his past epics.

Ford's new film — his first since "Seven Women" in 1966 — will be called "Appointment With Precedence" and it will deal with Josh Clayton, the first black graduate of West Point to command a black cavalry unit. It's an original story by Robert Johnson, a black actor who appeared in "Sergeant Rutledge," "the Western I did in 1960," Ford said. Johnson is working on the treatment now with James Warner Bellah, who was co-author of the "Rutledge" script.

The role of Clayton will be played by Fred Williamson, the former football star who was featured on TV's "Julia," as well as in the movies' "M-A-S-H," "Tell Me That You Love Me, Junie Moon" and the upcoming "Legend of Nigger Charley."

Woody Strode, who was so striking in "Sergeant Rutledge," will play a sergeant once again, this time one who deeply resents his new black commander from West Point. According to Lee B. Winkler, Ford's associate, shooting should start late this summer.

"I've been sitting around for a long time," Ford said, "and although my mind was working, my feet were beginning to itch. Sure, I've been offered lots of scripts, but this is one I can really sink my teeth into. Not only because of its action — clashes between the cavalry and the Indians and the like — but also because of its exciting ideas. Then, too, we'll be filming in Monument Valley, which has always been pretty exciting for me."

It's always been pretty exciting for us, too.

Screenwriter Ernest Lehman, who made his directorial debut on the soon-to-be-released film of Philip Roth's best seller, "Portnoy's Complaint," will next direct "Everybody Seems to Be having fun But...," based on a screenplay by — Ernest Lehman.

"It's my first original script since 'North By Northwest,' which I wrote for Hitchock back in 1959," Lehman said the other day. "It's an action adventure with comedy — in the tradition of 'North by Northwest' — and it deals with an American tourist in Mexico who innocently stumbles on a revolutionary plot to destroy Acapulco.

The plotters have no idea that the tourist has no idea of what they're up to, so there are many, many chases and hairbreadth escapes. I'd love to entice Cary Grant out of retirement to play the American and I'm discussing the principal Mexican roles with Andres Garcia and Jacqueline Voltaire."

"Everybody Seems to Be Having Fun But..." will begin its fun and deal games next November in Acapulco.

Have you finally learned everything you always wanted to know about sex and finally summoned up the courage to ask? If not, you may want to look in on "Naked Came the Stranger," the movie which playwright-novelist Rosalyn Drexler is adapting from the 1969 novel by "Penelope Ashe."

You remember Penelope — she's the 25 Newsday editors and reporters who put their naughty heads together and came up with a sizzling spoof of super-sexual best sellers. Folio One Production headed by Al Brodan will put "Naked Came the Stranger" before its unblushing cameras sometime next fall.

Japan Backs Venture

OTTAWA (CP) — A $1 million prefabricated housing plant financed by Japanese interests is to be built at Gimli, Man., the trade department announced Friday.

The joint venture is by Misawa Homes Co. Ltd. of Tokyo and Greenwood Forest Products (1969) Ltd. of Penticton, B.C. The company, to be called Misawa Greenwood Homes Ltd., plans to turn out 1½ prefabricated homes in every eight-hour shift.

Japanese capital is backing the project but control of the company will remain completely in Canadian hands, the trade department said in a news release.

President J. L. Dobi of Greenwood Forest Products said an agreement has been reached with Misawa for export to it of 12 million board feet of western spruce, pine and aspen valued at $1.5 million. It will be shipped over a five-year period.

The department said specially-designed equipment, patented adhesives and automated production methods for wall, floor and roof panels will be used in the production system.

Mr. Average and Pay-As-You-Go

• YOUR TAXES •

By I. H. ASPER

If the CBC stopped losing money, we could eliminate all estate taxes. And it wouldn't cost the federal treasury any money.

The federal estate tax collected is about equal to the annual grant paid to the CBC.

The estate tax collected each year is less than one per cent of the total federal revenue for the year. Yet this seemingly insignificant tax is a constant irritant.

Because of it, people leave to retire, face forced liquidation of their assets, distort their family relationships, pay life insurance premiums and generally dislocate themselves.

The "pay-when-you-go" concept is difficult to defend philosophically — its origins lie in feudalism.

Perhaps people accept it because they think it applies only to the very rich, and not to them. That's just not true. Through careful estate planning, our wealthy citizens avoid or minimize it. In the end, the estate tax is paid by people with "average" sized estates.

Estate tax rates begin at 10 per cent and escalate by rapid degree to 54 per cent. There are exemptions, but there are also many things that are included for taxing which one might not normally think of as part of his estate.

Blank is married and has three children. During his 40-year working career he earns an average of $8,000 yearly and pays an average income tax of $900. He spends $6,700 on living and acquiring capital assets (car, house, furnishings, cottage) and spends $400 yearly on life insurance. His life insurance has a face value of $35,000 and he has made it payable in a monthly annuity form to his widow.

At age 24 he bought a house in his own name for $13,000 with a $2,000 down payment and monthly payments of $100.

At age 45, with the children more or less independent, he starts contributing $500 to a mutual investment fund, as a savings program. The fund earns an average of 7 per cent interest per year for him over the next 20 years.

At age 65, he retires. By this time his house and cottage are paid for. He begins drawing his employees pension, which based on the current type of pension in use would probably provide a pension of $5,500 per year to him and $3,700 per year to his wife if she survives him.

He also draws old age security and Canada Pension Plan funds. He still saves a little.

He dies at 67, leaving Mrs. Blank surviving him.

Mutual fund accumulation (based on 7 per cent growth per year), $20,000.

Life insurance annuity, $35,000.

House value (based on actual inflation and increase in real estate value), $24,000.

Cottage, $7,500.

Value of widow's pension remaining under Canada Pension Plan, $12,000.

Value of employee pension remaining for widow, $36,000.

Cash in bank, $5,000.

House, furnishings, car etc., $5,000.

Total, $144,500.

This evaluation result is influenced by the fact that the commuted value of his employee pension is included for tax purposes. Also, the department of national revenue considers the widow's pension left under the Canada Pension Plan to be part of his taxable estate. He, like most people, forgot that his life insurance forms part of his taxable estate.

The estate tax payable by Mr. Blank amounts to about $16,000 and its payable in cash — there are no credit cards under the law. The only liquid asset is the mutual fund, and if the stock market is down at the time the tax is payable, Mrs. Blank is in trouble.

If Mr. Blank has made the tax mistake of leaving his estate to her outright, then when she dies, at any time five years later the same estate will be taxed again. This time the tax is about $6,000.

So after paying $36,000 in income tax during his lifetime his estate must now also pay an estate tax of about $22,000.

Much of Blank's taxes and troubles could have been legally and simply avoided.

If Blank had bought the family home in the name of himself and his wife, half of its value would have been in her name. After his share of the equity had grown to $10,000 in the home he could have made a tax-free once-in-a-lifetime gift of it to her.

This is specifically permitted under the law. If he could have found a reasonable way of having his wife pay the premiums on his life insurance, she could have owned the life insurance and this would have taken the life insurance out of his estate for tax purposes.

And finally if he had given his wife tax-free gifts of $4,000 per year over his lifetime, further estate reductions would have been made. These gifts are allowed by the law. And could have been in the form of the cottage and the mutual fund savings. If he had taken these estate planning steps, all of which are authorized by the law, he could probably have paid no estate tax.

This would be particularly true if instead of having left his estate directly to his wife, he had left her the income from it during her lifetime, with the estate going to the children at her death.

This example is not isolated. It happens daily because people prefer to concentrate on living rather than on dying.

If estate planning is done carefully and intelligently, people are able to preserve their estates. On the other hand, if it is applied on a do-it-yourself basis, without precise compliance with the law, it can boomerang with unfortunate consequences.

Asper is a Winnipeg lawyer and leader of the Manitoba Liberal Party.

Energy Crunch Talk As Popular as Sex

CALGARY (CP) — The subject of the "energy crunch" is becoming as popular a topic as sex which makes it difficult to assess the diverse flood of fact and opinion, an energy seminar was told here.

Ivor Strong, member of the Alberta Energy Resources Conservation Board, said the demand for energy is increasing rapidly "and in particular the demand for electric energy."

"Our resources are being used up very rapidly and perhaps more rapidly than we are finding reserves as far as gas and oil are concerned."

The former city commissioner said not enough faith is placed in research and the possibilities of nuclear power, coal gasification and development of existing petroleum reserves and the oil sands.

The day is past, he said, when utilities can live in isolation and concentrate only on technical factors.

"The industry must reassess its position and must do something about improving its public image," he said. And, over-all planning of power development can be improved.

Environmental problems should be part of long-range planning, joint ventures should be considered for new generation sites and Alberta's energy supply system should be better co-ordinated with nearby provinces and states.

Magnificent Set of Lungs First Need of Floor Trader

By AL FORREST
Times Business Editor

Being a floor trader on the Vancouver Stock Exchange is a young man's game.

They have a hectic life shouting bids and offering prices across the floor for seven hours a day, five days a week.

They don't end up hoarse, those whose throats can't take it don't last a week; those who survive develop a magnificent set of lungs.

But they do get exhausted. And as a result they retire at about age 30. In Japan, floor traders are often finished by the time they're 24.

In Vancouver the average age is about 27 with the great bulk of the traders being in their late twenties. There are only half a dozen old timers in the usual crowd of about 75.

START AT 7

They start work promptly at 7 a.m. and work non-stop to the closing bell at 2 p.m. If things slacken off they sometimes grab a quick coffee and sandwich about 11 a.m. but they return to the trading floor in a rush.

Each floor trader represents a brokerage firm. Their salaries are not high, ranging from about $8,000 to $12,000 a year. However, when prices change they are the first to know and they can often double their salaries by buying and selling for themselves at the right time.

Like all stock buyers, they run the risk of making a bad guess and losing money. There is almost no insider around the exchange who hasn't reported at least one healthy loss among his trades.

CLIENTS FIRST

And the floor trader is forced by the rules to clear all orders of clients first before he can make any trades on a stock for himself.

A trade begins when a client phones his brokerage firm and places an order to purchase, say, 500 shares of Consolidated Uranium at 41 cents. The order goes to the firm's order desk which has a direct phone line to a booth on the VSE trading floor.

A phone boy writes the order on a form — blue paper for buy and pink for sell — and hands the form to his company's floor trader.

The trader then shouts "Consolidated Uranium" or possibly "Con. U.!"

TRADES MADE

Other traders with orders for the stock quickly gather and the trades are made. Prices swing up when there are a surplus of orders to buy and go down when there are more orders to sell.

As soon as the deal is made the blue and pink slips are dropped to the floor. These slips make up the bulk of the paper that traditionally litters a stock exchange floor at day's end.

The selling trader makes a record of the sale in triplicate, one for himself, one for the other trader and a third that goes on a moving belt up to typists who record the sale on a tape-punching typewriter and the tape is run into the computer.

The computer — a $400,000 Univac leased at $7,000 a month — gets the message as quickly as 60 seconds or as long as 20 minutes after the trade. The latter time was common during the peak of the frantic Afton boom when traders had to line up to get their cards on to the belt.

After completing the sale, the floor trader shouts the new price ranges for the stock to the chalk boys who work on the big board above the phone booths.

Brokerage houses around Vancouver watch these prices change on the big board by means of closed circuit television.

It isn't always noisy on the VSE trading floor. Just usually. For a moment there will be no sound at all. Then someone shouts out an order and the babble builds up to a crescendo. At times like that, conversation is impossible and it's a wonder traders are able to make themselves understood.

But trades move briskly until the end of the day. And when the bell goes the traders rest on their oars.

GOOD BACKGROUND

In most cases, upon retirement, they move into administration jobs with their brokerage firms, having had a good background on a vast number of stocks.

While they make their wealth later, they often look back upon their years as a floor trader as the most exciting days of their life.

Homemaker Lien Rule Criticized

NANAIMO (CP) — Dave Barrett, provincial leader of the New Democratic Party, said Thursday he is concerned about the psychologocal damage to old-age pensioners that may result from a new provincial ruling.

The ruling, which went into effect May 1, requires that pensioners who receive Red Cross homemaker service paid for by the social assistance department must sign a lien on their property.

Approved by the legislature last session, the ruling is designed to allows the government to recover homemaker expenses from the recipient's estate after his death.

In that way, the pensioner would not be required to sell property in order to pay for the homemaker service, under which invalids receive personal care in their homes.

Barrett said there could be psychological harm done to an elderly person "asked to sign away property he has owned for years."

RECORD RECALL
WASHINGTON (UPI) — Automobile manufacturers recalled a record-setting nine million cars and trucks in 1971, eight times the 1970 total, the U.S. government said Wednesday.
The transportation department said the sharp jump in recalls stemmed mainly from General Motors' decision to recall 6,682,000 Chevrolet models produced between 1965 through 1969. The cars were recalled to correct possible engine mount defects.

EXISTING FORMULA UNFAIR?

Sewer Cost-Sharing Study Supported

An independent study of trunk sewer construction cost-sharing requested by Esquimalt was supported Friday by Saanich Ald. Alan Newberry, chairman of council's finance committee.

Newberry and Esquimalt Mayor Art Young confirmed there is feeling among Capital Regional District Board delegates from the three main municipalities that the existing formula may be based unfairly.

Two weeks ago Young invoked clause 15 of the letters patent to which Esquimalt, Saanich, Victoria, department of national defence and Indian affairs branch are party for sewer construction purposes.

The clause requires the regional board to engage an independent consultant to re-examine the technical data and projections for sewerage requirements in the district, for which the board is required to pay consulting fees.

Young cited the agreement, which said costs were to be allotted prior to construction of any part of the system serving Saanich and that force of circumstances apparently prevented the procedure from being followed.

A technical committee composed of municipal engineers from the areas concerned made the projections upon which cost-sharing will be based.

It was the Esquimalt contention that the Saanich share — based on a cubic feet per minute flow in 2015 — at 26.4 is too low and that a figure of 39.9 would be more realistic.

"Nobody's too happy with the cost-sharing," Young said. He felt there was some question of future land use and population density within the sewer area, and also the capacity of the trunk system and the proportionate shares of the member municipalities.

Ald. Newberry said Saanich had not taken an official stand on the matter, but he felt "some modification" of the formula as set out in February would be in order.

Young said he believed that if Esquimalt had not done so first, Saanich or Victoria would have invoked the clause requiring an independent study.

Starling Control Plan Urged

Establishment of an international committee to study methods of controlling starlings — the bane of fruit growers, was proposed today by Richard Stocks, manager of the B.C. Federation of Agriculture.

"The population explosion of starlings has reached such proportions that something has to be done to keep them away from orchards when the fruits are ripening," he said.

"I'm getting complaints from Saanich and Okanagan fruit growers — any place where cherries or grapes are grown," he added.

Stocks and two B.C. experts are leaving next week to discuss the starling problem with U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service officials at Yakima, Wash.

FRIEND, FOE

He will make his proposal for an internatiional committee at the Yakima meeting.

Stocks said the black birds present a dilemma.

They are foes of fruit growers, friends of farmers growing field crops and of forestry. Their basic diet is insects.

Dairy farmers have no quarrel with the starling as he gobbles up by the millions crane flies which damage their hay.

Stock said he has been informed an international committee to study the starling problem has been formed in Europe.

"Europe has the same problem," he said. "So far they haven't been able to find a method of biologically controlling the birds."

The little black songbirds with pointed wings, short tails and long sharp bills number in the thousands on the Saanich Peninsula, according to Stocks.

ENGLISH BIRD

The birds were introduced to the United States from England in 1890 and gradually moved westward. They were first sighted in British Columbia in the early 1950s.

No one knows why starlings have been so successful in North America. But there is a possibility they may have filled a vacuum in nature resulting from the extermination of the carrier pigeon in the 19th century.

Wildlife Habitat Project Planned for Island Areas

Some fish and wildlife projects will be carried out on Vancouver Island with funds from the new $400,000 budget for animal habitat improvement, a government spokesman said today.

These would include developing nesting sites for waterfowl and stream improvements, he said.

He was commenting on an announcement made by Conservation Minister Ken Kiernan at the B.C. Wildlife Federation convention in Richmond, that 30 fish and wildlife projects will be carried out throughout the province this year.

Federation president George Smith urged delegates to vote in the next provincial election for candidates who sincerely want to protect the environment.

"We should make it plan to political aspirants that we expect government to start respecting and protecting the environment because the future of wildlife and recreation is at stake," Smith said.

Earlier in the convention, Smith accused the provincial government of shortchanging wildlife needs and operating the branch on a budget that bears scant relation to the value of the resource.

Unionists 'to Blame'

QUEBEC (CP) — Three union leaders of a common front of public service workers were personally responsible for the presence of riot police and procedural delays at their court appearance Thursday, Chief Justice Frederic Dorion of Superior Court said Friday.

The leaders were ordered to appear to face contempt of court citations for allegedly violating injunctions during last month's 11-day public service strike.

Half an hour after the scheduled start of the hearing, they walked out, saying they would not be heard in the presence of riot police and did not have to sit through delays.

Chief Justice Dorion replied in a statement that the delays were caused by lawyers and supporters of the union leaders. The courtroom was so packed with spectators that police were called to ensure order.

Marcel Pepin, president of the Confederation of National Trade Unions, Louis Laberge, president of the Quebec Federation of Labor, and Yvon Charbonneau, president of the Quebec Teachers Corp., compared the courtroom atmosphere to that of a "banana republic."

WORKERS WALK OUT

In other repercussions Friday of the public service strike:

—About 1,000 non-medical workers at Notre Dame Hospital in Montreal walked off their jobs for a study session after five of their colleagues were suspended. Hospital administrators said they were really protesting emergency legislation passed to end the strike.

—Five unions and eight officers received fines and jail terms for violating injunctions ordering maintenance of essential services during the strike.

A spokesman for Notre Dame Hospital said that since the strike was ended by back-to-work legislation April 22, employees have been "sabotaging hospital machinery," reporting to work late and calling in sick more frequently than before.

Penalties handed out Friday in Quebec City brought to 49 the number of union executives fined and sentenced to jail terms for contempt during the April walkout. Seven others have been fined only.

Execution of the sentences has been delayed pending appeals.

MINISTER COMMENTS

In the Quebec national assembly, Justice Minister Jerome Choquette also commented on the courtroom incident involving Mr. Pepin, Mr. Laberge and Mr. Charbonneau.

He accused them of using the presence of police as a pretext for walking out. But he conceded there appeared to be "a lack of judgment somewhere" in dispatching riot police to the court.

After the three left, Mr. Justice Cote heard arguments from the Crown calling for the maximum penalty of a $50,000 fine and a year in jail for each leader. Decision was reserved to an unspecified date.

NURSES' UNION HIT

In penalties handed out Friday, a union at Lac Edouard rehabilitation centre was fined $4,000 and its vice-president given a $2,500 fine and six months in jail. Two strike officials were fined $500 each.

The employees' union at Youville Hospital in Sherbrooke was fined $22,500 and two officers fined $5,000 and sentenced to six months.

The nurses' union at the same hospital was fined $3,500 but charges against five officers were dropped because the contempt citation was improperly drafted.

Top LIPs Extended

OTTAWA (CP) — The "most successful and effective" projects under the Local Initiatives Program will be continued until Sept. 30 with additional federal grants of $30 million, Manpower Minister Bryce Mackasey said Friday.

Most projects were to end by May 31, with a few continuing to June 16.

Mr. Mackasey told the Commons the projects that have already been extended to June 16 will not be eligible for the extension to Sept. 30. The June 16 extension was mainly to permit completion of construction projects.

The new injection of $30 million raises the total committed to L.I.P. to $180 million. About $100 million has been given to projects sponsored by community groups and $50 million to municipalities.

ALTAIR: New Educational Device

Children Intrigued, Delighted

By PAT WILLIAMS

An educational device, based on mathematics and used by the Arabs at least 1,000 years ago, has just been launched from London. It is arousing considerable interest among educationists who find the device fascinates children and holds their attention for long periods. Correspondent Pat Williams examines it in this Forum World Features copyrighted story.

★ ★ ★

LONDON — A new educational device launched here is currently intriguing and delighting children, teachers, mathematicians, scientists, architects and designers, psychologists and, in fact, all adults who just enjoy doodling.

The device is a series of black and white patterns, based on mathematics that go back as far as the Arabs of the 10th century, and probably much farther. The man who rediscovered and developed these mathematical "relationships" is Ensor Holiday, a quiet-spoken, attractive biologist in his sixties.

The story is a fascinating one. It began eight years ago, when Holiday was hurt in a car smash. Geometry had always been his hobby. While he was laid up he decided to explore a question which always fascinated him: did certain designs which turn up all over the world have a common mathematical basis.

From the pottery of Italy to the stained glass windows of the French cathedral to the patterns of Persian tiles—was there an identifiable ingredient shared by them all?

The short answer is "yes": eventful news to mathematicians and may others. But it took a long time.

What Holiday thought would be a few day's work turned into a problem which took two years to solve, and even then needed the help of a computer. The computer, interestingly, could itself only come up with, an approximate, though very close, solution: an equation which, drawn geometrically, produced a basic "module" — which in the ensuing years generated literally hundreds of designs.

The patterns became Holiday's obsession. He spent every scrap of spare time deriving new designs from the original series. His study began to look like an alchemist's den, with exotic designs crowding the walls, cramming the shelves and spilling out of drawers.

His friends caught the bug too. They pestered him for designs to take home. Everyone felt the urge to transform the skeletal structures by colouring them in.

For the designs were odd. For instance, they seemed to "move." As the observer watched, the lines appeared to "flow" and the picture alter in front of his eyes. Again, the designs had a "centre" where anyone chose to make one.

Once the decision was taken, the design would organize itself around this "centre," to be "fixed" by coloring it in. But once the "centre" was removed, by another decision, then the patterns which had been lifted out fell back into the original moving flow of lines.

About two years ago the designs were tried out in 40 schools. Children were told simply to "color the shapes they saw." The results were remarkable. Teachers consistently reported that attention-span seemed lengthened during work on the patterns: there were many accounts of eigh-year-olds working in silence for an hour-and-a-half. Furthermore no two children produced the same results; nor were they interested in what their neighbors were doing.

★ ★ ★

A device to keep children quiet is rare enough. But there was more. Everyone involved saw their own interests reflected back at them. For instance: art teachers reported a stepping up of children's capacity to handle color. Mathematics teachers liked the "organic" nature of the patterns, and the special relationships the child would absorb while working on them.

Inspectors of schools saw applications for backward and handicapped children. Psychologists said they saw developmental and character clues emerging from the way the designs were approached.

Parallel with interest at primary-school level came growing interest elsewhere. A well-known educational psychologist, Dr. James Hemming, talks about these designs as "a breakthrough in perception so extraordinary that we haven't realized the full significance yet." An eminent physicist, Professor David Bohm, has used the designs to illustrate a lecture on the structure of thought and language. A growing number of zoologists, crystallographers, mathematicians and scientists of one sort or another have taken the material away to study. Artists and designers are turning the patterns into wallpaper, fabrics and tiles.

The most breathtaking derivation of all is on show at a London exhibition, connected with the architectural profession. It is a moving light box in which one of the patterns is revolved over itself. The effect is stupendous — like a galaxy in motion. It is the work of 23-year-old Roger Burrows, a student-teacher, who has devoted all his spare time to working with Holiday. One spectator stood in front of it, unmoving, for four hours. When asked why, he simply said: "It makes me feel alive."

Holiday is not surprised at the enthusiasm his work is generating. He thinks the interest may have something to do with the fact that the patterns have a relationship to what he calls "the mathematics of growth." They are organic, having more to do with the way living things move and grow than the way equations and forms are rigidly pinned down on desk top and in the exercise book.

The response, he thinks, is almost "instinctive." He had called the family of designs "Altair," which is a remnant of Arabic meaning "flying eagle," and also, appropriately, a star of the first magnitude, used in navigation.

Currently, the eagle is flying all over the world. Longman, the publishers, who have published eight of the hundreds of designs for use in primary schools, is negotiating their publication all over Europe. Israel was first to buy them. Orders are pouring in from everywhere, including the remote Gilbert and Ellis islands. Before publication, in fact, more than half a million sheets were sold.

Holiday recently gave the first public lecture on Altair here in London. It was jammed: professional people of all kinds were squatting on the floor, and standing elbow-to-elbow in all the available space. They were rewarded for their discomfort.

★ ★ ★

Holiday "revealed" more than he has ever done before about the mathematics of the designs, and their properties were shown to be very odd indeed. He showed, for instance, how tile-patterns, which normally in our culture are built up from four tiles at the most, can, on the Altair system, be expanded into sets of up to 36. This, apparently, could be the start of a new design style. No less.

See for yourself — use this pattern to test Altair

EXAMPLE of the designs which can be created with Altair patterns is this star-dancing harlequin. Evolve a design of your own on the pattern reproduced at right.

Gov't Buys Mill In Newfoundland

ST. JOHN'S, Nfld. (CP) — The Newfoundland legislature gave final approval Friday night to a bill authorizing purchase by the provincial government of a giant linerboard mill and logging operation from industrialist John C. Doyle.

The house held unusual morning and night sessions to rush the bill through second and third readings. Finance Minister John Crosbie said the legislation would take effect when it is proclaimed Tuesday or Wednesday.

The bill authorizes the Progressive Conservative government to pay up to $5 million for the mill in Stephenville and the logging operation in southern Labrador. The projects are expected to cost $50 million upon completion.

Mr. Crosbie said the deal made with Mr. Doyle was "rotten and lousy" but was the best arrangement the government could come up with to salvage the operation.

Opposition Leader Ed Roberts said the payment of $5 million was unwarranted and unnecessary.

The finance minister said the government was forced to rescue the projects because of mismanagement by the former Liberal administration and by Javelin Paper Corp. and Javelin Forest Products Ltd., subsidiaries of Mr. Doyle's company Canadian Javelin Ltd. He said that when the project ran into financial trouble a year ago, the Liberals failed to take it over and instead "started making secret loans without telling the public."

Under the legislation, the government would also pay any part of an additional $5.5 million Canadian Javelin claimed was invested in the project, if the company could prove the money was advanced to the mill and logging operations.

The province also assures liabilities of $89 million in loans and expenses and may spend another $50 million to complete the project.

Tories Battered in Towns As U.K. Labor Sweeps Vote

LONDON (CP) — Conservatives were battered in the battle of town halls across Britain, raising doubts whether Prime Minister Heath would call a general election this year.

Triumphant Labor candidates stormed to power in the annual municipal elections Thursday, gaining almost 1,000 council seats, mainly from Tories who lost more than 800.

Labor seized control of such towns as Birmingham, Canterbury, Coventry, Derby, Dover, Grimsby, Leeds, Nottingham, Peterborough, Preston, Reading, Bolton and Slough.

Conservatives were consoled, however, in the outcome of one of the two parliamentary byelections. They retained the Kingston, Surrey, seat while Labor retained its own south London stronghold of Southwark.

In Kingston, Conservative Norman Lamont won with 52.3 per cent of the vote compared with 31 for Labor—a 1.9-per-cent shift to Labor from the result in the 1970 general election. Lamont had 16,679 votes compared with 9,892 for Labor candidate A. Judge.

In Southwark, Labor candidate Harry Laborn took the seat with 12,108 votes compared with 2,756 for Conservative Jeffrey Gordon. Lamborn had 67.3 per cent of the vote, compared with the Conservative candidate's 18.1. This represented a 11.1-per-cent swing to Labor.

The vote trend in these parliamentary test cases probably reflected some increasing public unhappiness with the Heath administration.

The Tory leader faces strong resistance to his drive to push Britain into the Common Market and to tame the unions. In addition to the threat of national port and rail strikes, the country is still in the grip of inflation with housewives grumbling about food prices and other rising costs.

But the challenge of the unions is perhaps most critical. Conservative political advisers sense that the public may become increasingly bitter over union disruption of vital services and there has been some speculation that Heath might risk an early general election next fall on the unions issue. His mandate doesn't run out until 1975.

The following is the party standings in the House of Commons after the two byelections: Conservatives 326; Labor 288; Liberals 6; Scottish Nationalist one; Republican Labor one; Independents three; Speaker one, deputies three. Total 630.

OUTFALL LOW BID: $106,369

HB Contracting Ltd. was low bidder at $106,369 for the Central Saanich sewage outfall to be located just south of Turgoose Point.

Only other bid received by the Capital Regional District was from Chew Excavating Ltd., $117,997.

The 2,000-foot outfall will be part of an east-west sewer line under construction in the municipality.

Tisdalle To Be Opposed

A past president, now vice-president of the Saanich and the Islands Social Credit Association plans to run against incumbent MLA John Tisdalle for the party nomination.

Carl Bitterman, a resident of Saanich for 17 years, will contest Tisdalle's candidacy at a nominating convention May 12.

Bitterman said Friday he had been approached by friends and members of the association asking him to seek the nomination.

"If there's to be someone contesting Tisdalle's nomination it might as well be me because I know the constituency. I have had an interest in the area for years and know about the issues in the constituency", he said.

He is a bus driver and a former salesman, married with two children. He lives at 3361 Raymond South in Saanich.

Foster Isherwood, a former Saanich alderman and an unsuccessful candidate in last year's Victoria mayorality election also stated he has been asked to seek the nomination.

B.C. Ballet Program Tonight

B.C.'s ballet company, Ballet Horizons, will perform at 8 p.m. tonight in the McPherson Playhouse, presenting a program to appeal to every taste.

In addition to classical works, the 20-strong cast will also perform Faune, by modern standards still as sensuous as when it was first performed by the great Nijinsky in 1912.

The guest artist is Bill Martin-Viscout, the internationally known Canadian dancer who now makes his home in Texas. Dianne Bell of Vancouver is the ballerina.

The ballet performed to sell-out audiences when it was here in September and plans to present the Nutcracker in Victoria this December.

Tickets are still available for tonight's performance.

Hospital Society Head Returned

Wood has been president and chairman of the society's board since it was formed 2½ years ago to take over the former St. Joseph's Hospital from the Sisters of St. Ann.

BEFORE THE JUDGE

A Quebec man was given three weeks to pay a $250 fine for possession of marijuana when he appeared in provincial court Friday, after the prosecution expressed doubts the accused would pay the fine.

Jacques D. Grimard, of Granville, Que., was arrested in the 1200-block Store Street May 4. He had a plastic bag containing a small amount of marijuana.

Judge William Ostler was told by Prosecutor John MacIntyre that giving the man time to pay the fine entailed the risk he would return to Quebec and forget about it.

Ostler said he was "not going to make a distinction between Canadian citizens from one part of the country or another."

He told Macintyre that if Grimard wanted to ignore the fine, he would leave an arrest warrant hanging over his head in British Columbia, and "if he wants to do that, it's up to him."

★ ★ ★

The judge told Kim Beith, 17, of 635 Langford he was getting a "remarkable break" in being handed a suspended sentence and two years' probation on a charge of theft involving less than $50.

Beith, in company with two friends, stole an $11.88 hubcap from a car parked in the underground lot of an Esquimalt Road apartment building "as a joke" March 28.

At the time of the offence, the accused was on probation from a May, 1971, theft conviction.

"Very few people go to jail any more on first offences, and that is just and proper," Ostler said. "But the court won't countenance repeat offences."

Ostler said it was "encouraging that you have finally come to your senses with respect to drugs," referring to the accused's defeat of a heroin habit.

"Heroin could punish you more than I ever could with a short jail term," the judge said.

Brock Douglas Flett, 24, of 1358 Craigflower, was sentenced to six months in jail by Judge F. S. Green on a charge of double -doctoring — altering a prescription for the heroin withdrawal substitute methadone.

Judge Green noted Flett claimed to have withdrawn from the "vicious and senseless trap of heroin," but that repeat offences must still be treated severely by the courts. Flett had a previous herein-related conviction.

The six-month term must be served in addition to any time the accused must spend in prison by virtue of violation of the parole he was serving when the double-doctoring offence occurred April 4.

Martens was taken to Victoria police station for a breathalizer test March 3, according to testimony by arresting officers Tom Anderson and Ralph Ovinge. He punched Anderson in the chest after stating he was leaving, the officers said.

Defence council Harold Turnham asked that the charge be dismissed because the accused was not under arrest and had the right to go when Anderson attempted to restrain him from leaving.

Green reserved judgment because of the "interesting points" raised by Turnham. Judgment will be handed down May 10.

In traffic court, Judge E. F. N. Robinson fined two drivers $400 and gave them partial four-month driving bans for impaired driving.

They were Byron Robert Kirkoff, 40, of 2581 Maynard, who was stopped April 28, and Bruce Turner Junkin, 19, of 601 Raynor, stopped April 30.

Henry J. Musial, 20, of 353 Herriot, was fined $250 for stealing two wine decanter sets worth $23 each from the Red Lion Motor Hotel March 26. He pleaded guilty.

Gary M. Pearson, 20, 490 Sturdie St., was fined $100 with a month to pay and given a nominal one day in jail for being unlawfully in a dwelling house.

Pearson found himself in the wrong house when going to see a girl friend.

Judge Ostler said Pearson was a "good navy fellow". "I think you're a decent chap really," said Ostler in pronouncing sentence.

Party Round Won't Materialize

DALLAS (UPI) —Every day for 20 years, in every edition of both Dallas daily newspapers, there ran a brief statement in the small type of the classified advertisement section reading: "Thanks to all of you for helping O. L. Nelms make another million dollars."

And millions he made. Starting by selling hominy by the bucket at the age of eight, Nelms had built a real estate empire valued at $15 million.

Nelms, 64, died Thursday of a blocked artery.

But one of Nelms' wishes — that lavish cocktail parties be held for everyone in his honor when he died — apparently will not come to pass.

A spokesman for his estate said the parties will not be given "because Mr. Nelms was never able to set it up in a manner he thought would be fitting."

Three years ago Nelms announced he was prepared to put $5 million to $10 million in a trust fund to hold a staggering number of cocktail parties in his memory. Everyone would be invited, he said.

★ ★ ★

"There will be no limit on the number of drinks a person could have," Nelms said. "It takes 10 drinks to do for me what one drink will do for some other people, but then I have soaked in alcohol for the last 40 years."

He said he wanted his coffin to be at the parties and for his body to remain at each one until the last guest left.

Nelms used to say he wanted to be rich ever since he sold hominy in Johnson Country, Tex., at the age of eight. He was born on a sharecropper's farm in the central Texas County.

When he started making his millions, he began running his "thank you" ads in the newspapers and put his slogan on billboards and signs throughout the Dallas area.

Nelms always said he enjoyed being rich and he didn't mind it if people called him eccentric because of the way he spent it, and he liked to point out that he drove a pickup truck — "not a Cadillac." He donated much of his fortune to colleges, churches, museums and hospitals.

He quit school as a third-grader to expand his hominy business, later dealt in wholesale tobacco, and made the bulk of his estimated $15-million in real estate.

"You name any piece of property in Dallas and I can tell you where it's located, how much it's worth and who owns it," he once said.

"I'm never wrong. That's how I got rich and that's how I'm going to stay rich."

IN VICTORIA for two speeches Monday will be federal Industry, Trade and Commerce Minister Jean-Luc Pepin, who will address luncheon open to public sponsored by Victoria Chamber of Commerce in Old Forge of the Strathcona Hotel. At 7:30 p.m. Monday in Empress Hotel ballroom he will address dinner meeting of the Travel Industry Association of Canada.

KKK Zeroing In on Government

For some Klansmen, the new enemy is the FBI in particular and big government in general, rather than blacks, long-haired hippies, Catholics and Jews.

In fact, Robert Miles, Imperial Kludd (chaplain) of the United Klans of America (UKA) and a former grand dragon of the Michigan Klan, is actively seeking an alliance with some of the Klan's former foes.

"The real enemy," Miles said, "is not the black man but the concentration of power in the hands of the greedy few who manipulate our lives from New York, Washington and Boston."

Miles was interviewed at a truck stop near his farm home at Cohoctah in rural Livingston County, known by many as "Klan country." A few weeks earlier, Miles had been beaten by members of youth against war and fascism while on a recruiting trip to Wayne State University in Detroit.

★ ★ ★

Miles made a point of noting that it was a group of black students who pulled the radical white youths off him.

"It's ridiculous for the black man to be considered a threat," Miles said. "After all, he's in the same position as us — the victim of an evil corporate state."

"We've been oppressed, too. Most of us (Klansmen) are workers, either in the small shops or at the large assembly plants, and all of us have had to scratch for a living."

For many years Miles was a manager and safety lecturer with the General Accident Insurance Co. He was asked to resign after speaking at a public Klan rally last year. Now he farms and conducts Klan church services which resemble fundamental prayer sessions.

Miles was accompanied at the truck stop by his nephew Ed Reimer, 23. Both were charged last October along with four others of conspiring to thwart a federal court order and the rights of other citizens in the dynamite-ignited burning of 10 Pontiac, Mich., school buses shortly before a court-ordered integration of the city's schools.

Reimer was not indicted because of insufficient evidence.

Asked about "the conspiracy," Miles grinned "what conspiracy?"

"I think the FBI did the bombing," he said. "If they're capable of penetrating the SDS, the Weatherman, and the other groups that have been accused of bombing, why couldn't they have done it in Pontiac?"

In what turned out to be a major theme of his rambling commentary, Miles added: "If the trend toward the nationalization of the police continues, we're going to end up in concentration camps with the bearded radicals, some of the blacks, and anyone else who's opposed to federal authority.

In the statements of Miles and Reimer there was an apparent openness that does not jibe with an image of super-secrecy, unhearthly names and nocturnally donned robes and paraphernalia.

"Yes, this is a new policy," Miles said. "As soon as I was elected to office in Michigan in 1969, I went to the FBI and the state police and told them I was the head of the Klan in Michigan and if they wanted to know anything about the Klan, to call me."

Miles said he has been an advocate not only of an open, above ground Klan but of non-antagonism toward blacks.

These opinions have attracted some hostility and suspicion from unexpected quarters, he said.

"I've been called a Communist by the John Birchers and some Klansmen think I'm in the FBI," Miles said.

"I have spoken to some SDS types in the past two months. Of course, I can't say who they were. We thought they might meet with us in May to discuss the problem common to both of us . . . growth of federal police power.

"But they were pretty hostile and suspicious."

Vancouver Trash No Problem Yet

By LARRY LEMON

VANCOUVER (CP)—A tow-headed 10-year-old chased across the grass at Queen Elizabeth Park, his head back as he watched his model glider battle gentle breezes.

He was within inches of catching it when he tripped over a pile of garbage and fell flat.

The young glider-flyer's footing probably won't improve until the civic workers' strike for higher wages is over.

Most city agencies report the strike has not had much effect yet, that garbage pile-ups aren't bad and won't be a health hazard for a while.

In Stanley Park, the zoo is closed and so are the park toilets.

At city hall, visitors are stopped at a barricade of tables stretched across the lobby, where several men sit answering telephones and guiding people down echoing corridors to almost empty offices.

HEALTH INSPECTORS OUT

The head of the public health department says "everything will be all right as long as we get the public's co-operation," but 24 of his 25 health inspectors are manning picket lines instead of monitoring the city's restaurants, food stores and food-processing plants.

The remaining inspector, a senior man exempt from the strike, is working overtime investigating "only the most critical complaints."

A man who said he worked in the licence division said only tax bills were being sent out, and he didn't know when he'd get paid next since the pay-office staff are all union members on strike.

The pay stoppage is a double-edged sword though, for striking inside workers were not allowed to cross their own picket line Monday to collect their last paycheque.

"It's a bloody shame to see this happening, you know," a taxi driver said on the way to the courthouse. "You should see some of the back lanes in this city—BLACK plastic bags piled everywhere.

"I've been here since '39 and I've seen this sort of thing before. The real damage is done after the garbage is picked up, when everyone's standards seem to slip a little . . . They don't seem to mind a little more crud in the streets."

Roger Lake and mural at Arbutus Secondary

By HELEN MELNYK
Special to the Times

Students going up and down the stairway stopped to watch and comment on the progress of the 28-year-old Mexican artist's work. There was the occasional wolf-whistle of aesthetic appreciation from a passing female student.

Although the $100 a week he receives for painting at Oak Bay Senior Secondary School is barely enough to support himself, his wife and son, Merino isn't complaining.

He likes this job better than the previous one, installing wire fences on a part-time basis.

Like many other young Victoria artists, Merino found he could not make a living by his craft.

If an artist cannot get on payroll as a teacher, then the closest thing to a salary he would get was the monthly social assistance cheque, supplemented by odd jobs like putting in fences, gardening or carpentry.

Out of 35 applicants, 18 painters, musicians, and poets were chosen by a 5-man committee appointed by the school board to work for periods of 8 to 13 weeks. The school board criteria for the selection was that the applicant be unemployed and have ability. The artists are provided with all the materials they need.

In addition to providing employment, the program is designed to create an appreciation for art in students and to beautify the schools, the official said.

Back at Oak Bay, Merino is in the ninth week of his 13-week job. For the time allowed, he has involved himself in an ambitious project — two murals on opposing walls, 21 by 22 feet and 21 by 15 feet. From a thick book full of sketches and the work already laid down, Merino pieced together the finished product. The subjects of the murals are youth's confrontation with society and youth's vitality, Merino explains.

"The only thing I want to do is to paint," he said. "But in this society I don't have the economic freedom to do what I want to survive. I have to put aside my art to perform menial tasks."

Merino feels that artists should be supported because they have a significant contribution to make to society.

"The role of an artist is to communicate ideas, and to create a beautiful and stimulating environment for others to live and work in. Through art history is recorded, and a country's tradition and identity is formed."

At Esquimalt senior secondary Jose Polutnik, a 34-year-old Yugoslavian expatriot, was putting the finishing touches on his sculpture, entitled Repose, a quartz abstract of a girl sitting down.

"Smart alecks," he muttered at the students heckling the finished product. During his 13-week stint, he has to do the rounds of seven schools, creating a piece at each. The reaction of students varies from school to school, he said.

"In some schools the students are very interested. They ask what it feels like. So I hand them the chisel and let them have a try."

Since his graduation from the Vancouver School of Art in 1962, Polutnik has been hauling rocks around. During the week he worked as a landscaper, spending evenings and weekends sculpturing out of stone.

Though he prefers working in the medium he is using now and in plastics, the $300 salary he was earning monthly, didn't allow for such extravangances "and rocks are lying around free for the taking."

Roger Lake was scrubbing down the doors at Arbutus senior secondary school yesterday after completing his 27 by 16 foot outdoor wall mural. The result is more of a "sign" than a mural, Lake said. He refused to explain what it was a sign of.

"It makes itself felt immediately. There's no story behind it."

Of the three, Lake was the only one who had a job as a painter before being chosen for the local initiative program. He worked in the Greater Victoria Art Gallery as a house painter.

"Ironic, isn't it ? But I enjoyed the atmosphere", he said.

"An artist creating before everyone's eyes makes for direct contact with art without the whole social ritual that usually goes along with it. People put on their Sunday clothes to go to venerate art in a gallery that's quiet like a tomb. Each painting is enclosed in a box. Art should be alive at every moment."

Although the program is a stop-gap, it gives the artists some publicity and an "ego lift," said Colin Graham, director of the Greater Victoria Art Gallery.

"If an artist feels that society appreciates and wants his product, he'll continue creating. Hopefully the young artists with real ability will make it."

Human Involvement in Dentistry for Poor

By AB KENT
Times Staff

Birdcalls help create human involvement in the capital's first full-range dental clinic for the poor.

"Therapy starts the moment you come in. There's human involvement," said Dr. Eugene Kaellis, a former research scientist, bookseller, university professor and academic.

With the help of Cool Aid, Kaellis on Wednesday opened a dental practice in the 80-year-old wooden church built by Emmanuel Baptist congregation at Gladstone and Fernwood.

Looking every year its age outside, the cosy, rebuilt interior is one doctor's attempt to bridge the economic-social gap.

Where thoroughly modern waiting rooms in a medical-dental building may have stereophonic. Muzak, shag broadloom and walnut panels, Kaellis' reception area has the original refurnished four-inch wooden flooring, painted wainscoting, chapel ceiling and bright new floral wallpaper.

They are friendly sounds for people who may feel alienated by the conventional approach to dentistry or institutional medicine.

DENTIST'S SUPPORT

But the Victoria and district Dental Society also support Kaellis' concept. A panel of local dentists will give free treatment in emergency situation to indigent youth.

Kaellis is not running a free clinic, but the fees are negotiable, worked out between patient and doctor on the basis of need and ability to pay. The first day was profitless.

Kaellis makes clear that he wishes to do nothing to offend the college of dental surgery who grants him a licence.

One of its professional rules of conduct prohibits advertising or any comparison of fees which may be charged.

"For this service to survive there must be an income from fees. Your co-operation is essential. We will attempt to adjust fees in cases of hardship. You may discuss your fee problem with us."

Why did he do it?

Many kinds of people may be going without proper dental care because they feel outside the "straight" society of which medicine and dentistry are representative; are offended by the trappings of some dental offices; the fees are more than they can afford; they are far from home without local contacts, or simply because they can't get an appointment for months.

They may be hippies, transient youth, welfare families, old age pensioners, students, low income earners, or Kaellis' friend from the university.

"This is a socially acceptable situation," Kaelis said. He'll never get rich at it, but he doesn't want that anyway. He said he owns no house, owes no money, plans to sell his car and his children are becoming self-sufficient. "It's not hard to live on $8,000 a year."

BORROWED MONEY

Pacific Community Self-Development Society — Cool Aid — makes it possible for the dentist to create such a service by providing the premises at nominal rent, with a contract that will benefit Cool Aid's social undertakings.

Kaellis will take an $8,000 annual income. Any other proceeds will be used by Cool Aid for social development projects.

The clinic was launched with borrowed money. It is hoped a federal grant may be secured to continue the clinic for as low an operating cost as possible.

The dentist and Wade have worked with University of Victoria associate professor of anthropology and sociology Roy Watson in seeking a demonstration grant from the national health and welfare department.

Up to this point Cool Aid provided only emergency dental work on a restricted, part time basis. Now the facility, has all the equipment and assistance necessary to offer a full range of dental services from preventative through corrective and replacement work.

Further, he'll keep accessible hours: 9 a.m.-5 p.m. Wednesday and Friday; 9 a.m.-3 p.m. Saturday; noon to 8 p.m. Tuesday and Thursday; closed Monday.

It is not a kooky clinic for kooky people, although kooky clients may well be served.

The doctor claims to be solidly entrenched in "straight" society and has the professional background that seems to confirm it.

RESEARCHER

He was born and educated in New York and his credits include a teaching fellowship at New York University in the field of microscipic anatomy. A main area of research was the thyroid gland.

For four years he was a senior research scientist for Bristol Myers Co. in New Jersey, then associate professor at the University of Saskatchewan College of Dentistry.

Kaellis has published scholarly papers in all his fields of interest, operated a part-time dental practice and ran a bookstore in Victoria.

But he is thoroughly absorbed in his new project.

'When I was a kid in Brooklyn I went to charity clinics," the 42-year-old dentist recalled. "This won't be like that. They are dreadful places."

Kaellis does not see himself as a do-gooder, full of self righteousness. He expects to have to steer a course between humility and cynicism in a job he enjoys, hopefully accepted for what it is — a new service in a needy area.

"I hope this will be good for me, a good spiritual exercise," he said.

His way with patients seems direct but gentle and uncondescending.

A boy of about 20, hair touching his shoulders, came in as Kaellis was preparing for afternoon appointments. His jaw was swollen, a gum painfully discolored.

The dentist apologized for not being able to give treatment immediately. (Finishing touches were being applied by a plumber to equipment in the laboratory.)

An old man from a nearby street, one of 11 patients examined the first day, was treated for a toothache with antibiotic medicine and pain pills and will return for further treatment.

FLOWER FEE

So grateful for the service in his own neighborhood, the man took Kaellis a big bunch of flowers from his garden.

A 32-year-old woman on welfare went to him with an abscessed root canal. Welfare would not pay for the cost of surgery, she said, but Kaellis will fix the problem.

A couple brought their 10 and 11-year-old children in to have cavities filled. Kaellis will do it, knowing they have no money.

One of the preventative services he hopes to perform is oral hygiene education. There will be its distributed containing information on diet, tooth care, dental awareness and the need for professional care.

But in Kaellis office education will be a two-way street:

"We've got to change attitudes. When the patient comes in — maybe a so-called hippie — he has got to lose his slavish attitude toward authoritarianism and I've got to drop my assumption of authority."

HERITAGE VICTORIA FOUNDED

Heritage Victoria, a new body devoted to preserving Victoria's oldest buildings, was launched Friday night in a meeting attended by about 30 people at city hall.

Ainslie Helmcken, chairman of the Greater Victoria Historic Building Foundation, said the meeting resulted in merger of his organization and the Capital Region Heritage Foundation.

The two groups will form the new foundation, Heritage Victoria.

Helmcken said pro-tem officers were appointed to make arrangements for the future of the group and to "consider overhauling the constitution of the Greater Victoria Historic Building Society to meet the needs of the new organization."

Slides of similar restoration in San Francisco were viewed at the meeting chaired by Willard Ireland, provincial librarian and archivist. There was "a good discussion of the objectives" of the organization," said Helmcken.

He said membership was not yet very large. A committee has been set up to find ways of raising money and a membership fee will be set.

This Year an End to an Old Nuisance

ONE SEASONAL RITE FAmiliar to outdoors users won't be required of us this year. The campfire permit, first issued by British Columbia Forest Service in 1927, is no more.

I'm not about to mourn its passing, either. It was simply another nuisancy little item to remember when heading out for a restorative weekend or vacation in the Queen's wildlands.

Perhaps the rules and instructions printed on its back had a beneficial effect on the permit-holder who bothered to read them. But industrial operations, lightning strikes and the careless smoker's discarded butt or match caused more flareups than the campfire ever did, and I don't expect that situation to change in this new fire season.

Even so, all went well enough in the matter of permits for generation unto generation. The official slips were free for the asking. You could pick up a season ducat at any sporting goods store, and if you forgot, the omission could be made good at the nearest ranger station.

Last year, for reasons never satisfactorily explained, the provincial department of lands, forests and water resources under which the Forest Service functions decreed a tougher system.

The May through October campfire permit became virtually impossible to obtain. Short-term permits — and very damned short they were — became the order of the day. Also, the list of issuing outlets was drastically reduced.

It became plain as the summer advanced that by lowering the boom on the camper who ventured beyond the provincial camping parks, the Forest Service had been stuck with a situation that was progressing from the merely irritating to the ridiculous.

A couple of fellows who had headed up-Island for a holiday sojourn in the boonies would return so full of righteous heat that they presented a fire-hazard in their own sizzling persons. The burden of their plaint was that their three-day permit — when they finally managed to snaffle one — was about as useful as dugs on a boar.

When the three days expired, they'd been forced to waste time precious to them on a trek out to the nearest centre for a renewal.

An experience or two of that sort set people to thinking. What was the point of these nuisance-restrictions? Who was being served — the public, or the forest industries that have been permitted to obtain a strangle-hold on what should be the public domain?

In any case, I can attest from personal knowledge that many otherwise law-abiding citizens — guys who in earlier years had filed a campfire permit in the hip pocket as a matter of course — adopted a new attitude.

If they could get a permit of reasonable duration without a lot of fuss and bother, fine. Otherwise, the hell with it!

Which may help explain why, with a new fire season upon the land, a rather startling reversal of attitude has taken place. The campfire permit is no longer required.

Regulations covering campfire location, proper extinguishing methods and conditions under which fires may or may not be lit still apply. So do the penalties imposed on the chump who ignores them.

Be warned, too, that the municipalities have their own bylaws governing the lighting of open fires outdoors.

Having replaced the provincial campfire permit with a set of commonsense rules, I hope our British Columbia government will now begin to apply commonsense in another direction.

It is a long time now since the Sloan Commission brought in its report: we need another and more broadly-based enquiry into this whole matter of woods use.

Notably, the rights and needs of an outdoors-minded population that grows larger each year must be taken into account.

I think it's long past time that the question of public access to lands sequestered by government as private preserves for the logging companies be closely reviewed.

A lot of us who drew our own conclusions about last year's fire-permit shmozzle are beginning to ask another related question.

Just whose province is this, anyhow?

CORPORAL PUNISHMENT STUDY SUPPORTED

Times Staff

VANCOUVER — A proposal by Victoria trustees to conduct a study into possible alternatives to the use of corporal punishment in schools was supported today by the annual convention of the B.C. School Trustees' Association.

Victoria trustee Walter Donald proposed the resolution saying discipline in the school is one of the most controversial and talked-about subjects in education.

Donald said he requested the study not because he favors corporal punishment or opposes it, but because alternatives to its use should be investigated.

He said the Victoria board has conducted its own study on the subject and found out that 74 per cent of the people surveyed favored some form of corporal punishment, "but only as a last resort."

Donald's original proposal, seconded by Victoria trustee Mrs. Daphne Temple, was that the BCSTA set aside $2,000 in its 1973 budget for the study.

The proposal brought charges of inconsistency from former BCSTA president Jim Campbell of Saturna Island, who said it was the same Victoria trustees who want the financial burden of property taxes for education removed from the taxpaying public.

However, an amendment to the resolution supported by the Victoria board was proposed by Vancouver trustee Peter Bullen that would involve no extra expenditure by the BCSTA. The research will be carried out by the association's research branch.

ASK THE TIMES

Q. If I were to win the $3,000 cash prize offered by the Victoria Days Society treasure hunt what taxes if any would be deducted?—A.B.

A. The district income tax office reports it would qualify as a windfall like a sweepstake or bingo prize and would not be subject to taxation.

Giants' Trade Offer Willie's Birthday Gift

(Times News Services)

The Giants are thinking about trading Mays, who was 41 years old today, to New York Mets.

"Maybe we'll talk when we get to New York," Horace Stoneham, Giants president, said Friday. "We'll discuss the possibility. We need pitchers."

The talks have been so serious that Stoneham admitted telling the Mets they had to promise to find a place for Mays in their organization, as the Giants have, when the outfielder decides to retire.

Mays learned about the secret Giants-Mets negotiations Friday in his hotel room over the telephone from a reporter. He wasn't upset about the possibility of being traded, but was visibly annoyed about not being informed.

"I only regret I wasn't told," said the outfielder, who still is the No. 2 home-run hitter of alltime.

PLAYED FRIDAY

He was in the lineup Friday night against Philadelphia and the $165,000-a-year superstar didn't help a .146 batting average as he went hitless in four-at-bats, leaving five runners on as the Giants lost 3-2 to the Phillies.

A source close to Mays infielder, who broke in with dicated that the great out- New York Giants May 25, 1951, wouldn't object to finishing his career in New York.

While Mays was forced to accept Giants' "birthday gift," outspoken Pittsburgh Pirates' pitcher Dock Ellis had his problems with guard at Cincinnati's Riverfront Stadium.

Ellis was sprayed with chemical mace when he tried to force his way into the stadium after failing to produce proper identification. Ellis appeared at the gate with teammates Willie Stargel and Rennie Stennett. The captain of the private police force at the stadium said Ellis threatened the guard with a half-filled bottle of wine.

The Pirates also had problems with the Reds, losing 5-4 in 10 innings.

EXPOS CLICK

Meanwhile, Montreal Expos continued to surprise National League rivals by beating Los Angeles Dodgers 3-1 as Bill Stoneman scattered seven hits and Ron Hunt supplied the winning runs with a two-run double.

Elsewhere, Hank Aaron drilled his 644th homer, moving to within two of Mays on the all-time list, as Atlanta Braves edged St. Louis Cardinals 2-1; the surprising Houston Astros blanked Chicago Cubs 3-0 and San Diego Padres beat the Mets 6-0.

In the American Legue, California's Nolan Ryan struck out 14 as he railroaded Milwaukee Brewers 4-0; Baltimore Orioles edged Kansas City Royals 3-2; Texas Rangers nipped Detroit Tigers 2-1; Minnesota whipped Boston Red Sox 5-2; Oakland Athletics downed New York Yankees 3-1, and Chicago White Sox shaded Cleveland Indians 2-1.

SOCCER REGALS SIGN THREE CITY PLAYERS

Three Victoria players have been signed by Victoria Regals of the new, semi-professional B.C. Premier Soccer League.

Team officials have announced the signing of winger Peter Wilson and striker Ash Valdal and Ike MacKay.

MacKay and Wilson were with Brian Hughes, manager-coach of the Regals, last season on Victoria Royals of the Western Canada Soccer League.

Hughes, who expects to announce additional signings next week, says that Jamaican international Tony Douglas should arrive in Victoria within a few days and will probably be in the lineup when the Regals open their season next Saturday in Vancouver against Eintracht.

Some Hockey Shop Talk: —Tallon Eyes Golf Tour

Meanwhile, the personal word from Hal Laycoe at Vancouver is that sure, he had some other alternatives when he was relieved of his duties as coach of the Canucks.

Think not? Well, a Seattle TV station even went so far as to officially announce that Laycoe had been appointed general manager and coach of the Totems. Not so, and a retraction followed, the next day.

As for Laycoe, his appointment as Poile's assistant, "Suited me best", because after two years, I suppose that someting had to be done."

Poile said so, too, emphasizing the point that the more he looked around, the man who best suited the role he had in mind, to assist him, was the same Mr. Laycoe who shortly will open a summer hockey school in Richmond. And there is yet another Laycoe who is well regarded. Hal's son Bob, director of the athletics at the University of Saskatoon, has been named to a committee as an observer for the Munich Olympics. This is a special assignment, the better to help Monsieur Drapeau prepare for his '76 extravaganza at Montreal.

★ ★ ★

Across the table at lunch was Dale Tallon of the Canucks, with cast removed after a post-season operation on his leg. What did Tallon do the first day out? He was out on the golf course, that's where, at Point Grey, and he was two over for the nine holes played. "The only problem was that I was hitting a two iron when normally I would use an eight," he said. Otherwise, everything was fine, even the leg. Later on Dale's summer calendar comes a 10-day trip to Jamaica as a member of a goodwill group of hockey players, and just to play golf. Oh boy! It's a tough life for a hockey player these summers. After that, Dale hopes to pick up the Canadian golf tour, then play defence for the Canucks this fall. "It should be somebody else's turn to play forward," he said of the switch that he didn't agree with under Laycoe last season.

★ ★ ★

If the query had merit, how do you play the game, new coach Vic Sasiuk had a quick answer to one reporter at Tuesday's get-together.

'Failry and squarely, except in the corners," he replied.

But Bud Pile went Stasiuk one better when he was telling of the Canucks new corporate image:

"Now we've got Vic and Hal on one side to run things efficiently, and me and Babe (Pratt) to foul them up."

Even for those who didn't know that Laycoe's ouster wasn't hockey's best-kept secret of the year, a close listener could have detected that there was a change in the wind several minutes before the official press release came out. Stasiuk, in talking to some of his new friends, whom he will get to know much better in late October, said of the luncheon:

"We may be late getting started today."

The key word was "we". Or as Vic also said: "If I was incognito when I arrived, I wasn't before I got into the lobby of the Bayshore. A guy can't do anything in this town."

And yes, Poile did so talk to Sammy Pollock of Montreal Canadiens about a coach. He wanted a Stanley Cup winner, Al MacNeil, but no sale. And the rumor that Scotty Bowman was denying the last month of the NHL season was that he would go to Toronto, John McLellan would give up the coaching job, and be made a scout, and Jim Gregory wouldn't have as much to say about the operation of the Maple Leafs as he has now. And don't bet that Vancouver's Rosaire Paiement is on the block now either. He's one of Vic Stasiuk's favorites, once played for him, and will likely be staying in Vancouver this fall.

And also, here's a note for aspiring juniors. When All-American goalkeeper Dan Brady, a 21-year-old graduate of Boston University, was signed to a two-year contract, he was accompanied by his advisor, Bill McDermott, of Nation-Wide Sports. It's the fashion of the times to have a spokesman, especially when Poile revealed what he thought of the young man: "He is one of the finest goaltending prospects I've ever seen."

If Poile had been hooked, McDermott was there to make sure. Now it's up to Brady. And the goal is wide open. Believe it. Poile still is making no secret of the fact that he'll deal for an NHL netminder, even if he has to give up a draft choice to get one. Brady, or Ed Dyck, could be No. 2 with Gary Smith, or Ed Johnston as No. 1.

As in championship bracket, they're scheduled to go 36 holes at Victoria Golf Club, starting with 18-hole matches at 9:30 a.m. and 1:30 p.m.

Champ Tests Trapp 'Jinx'

Youth challenges experience and the defending champion tests a "jinx" in Sunday's Times Vancouver Island Open golf tournament's semi-finals at Victoria Golf Club.

The 36-hole playoffs, beginning with 18-hole marches at 9:40 a.m. and 1:40 p.m., rate as interesting matchups.

There will be a greater difference in age than ability when Gordie Rands, a 19-year-old amateur from Cedar Hill, tees off against Al Zimmerman, the 63-year-old retired professional who plays out of Glen Meadows.

The other semi-final pits Cowichan's Bill Wakeham, the defender and this year's medallist, against Oak Bay's Vaughan Trapp.

Wakeham has won the Times Trophy three times and has been a finalist on two other occasions. Those are the credentials that established the 31-year-old pro as a pre-tournament favorite.

But Sunday's odds are tempered by the site — Trapp's home course — and the fact that the 28-year-old Oak Bay assistant has turned out to be Wakeham's master in the Island's major match-play tournament.

Wakeham has yet to defeat Trapp in their head-to-head meetings in the Island Open. Trapp toppled Wakeham in a second-round meeting at Uplands in 1966 and then scored the second in his two title triumphs by defeating Bill in the 1968 final at Gorge Vale.

Zimmerman, the oldest player ever to qualify for the open, isn't concerned about the rigors of a 36-hole march.

"If I'm going to do anything in this tournament, I'll have to do it at Oak Bay. It's a compact course, and my game is suited for it," says Al.

The Open matches will be preceded by the semi-finals for the Hugh Francis (handicap) trophy, starting at 9:30 and 1:30.

Dick Sparks of Uplands will play Gorge Vale's Alastair Fulton while Terry Moody faces Gorge clubmate Bill Burrows in the handicap division semi-finals.

Lakers in Control

NEW YORK (AP) — "If New York had won, everybody would have been talking about what a great game Bill Bradley played," said Gail Goodrich of Los Angeles Lakers.

"But they didn't," he said, pausing to savor the moment, then adding: "We did."

And by beating the Knicks 116-111 in overtime Friday night in Madison Square Garden, the Lakers, long frustrated trying for supremacy in the National Basketball Association, moved within a step of finally wearing the crown that has slipped from their grasp since 1954.

That was the year they last won the championship—only back then they were known as Minneapolis Lakers. In 1960 they moved to Los Angeles. Seven times since then they have made it to the finals. And seven times they have been thwarted, the last time in 1970 by the Knicks.

This time, however, they appear destined to win it all. They lead the best-of-seven series 3-1.

McMILLIAN GETS 23

"I'm not ready to celebrate yet," said Jim McMillian, who scored 23 points Friday night, including six on a trio of jump shots that had New York playing catch-up virtually throughout the overtime.

And Jerry West, who hit 28 to lead all scorers, added: "I'm anxious to play that next game."

Bradley scored 26 to top the Knicks. Two of his baskets, a pair of jumpers in a 22-second span, pulled New York into a 111-111 tie with 1:35 remaining in overtime.

But 20 seconds later, West's two free throws put the Lakers on top for good.

Jerry Lucas added 25 points —most of them on his patented bombs from beyond the top of the key—and Walt Frazier scored 24 for the Knicks, including a tip-in of Dave DeBusschere's shot with three seconds to go that sent the game into overtime.

Disputed Goal Helps Oil Kings Keep Title

REGINA (CP) — A disputed goal by Fred Comrie at 5:02 of sudden-death overtime gave Edmonton Oil Kings a 2-1 victory over Regina Pats and their second-consecutive Western Canada Hockey League championship.

Oil Kings now join Peterborough Petes and Cornwall Royals in a three-team tournament for the Memorial Cup, starting Tuesday in Ottawa.

Edmonton won the best-of-seven series 4-1 after dropping the opener.

Marcel Comeau gave Edmonton a 1-0 lead midway through the second period, but rookie Mike Wanchuk sent the game into overtime when he scored Regina's goal at 4:23 of the third period.

PATS COME CLOSE

In the overtime session, Regina held a wide edge in play and came close to winning it in the first two minutes when Scott Smith rattled a drive off a post from directly in front of the Edmonton goal.

The winning goal was hotly-disputed by the Regina team, which claimed the puck didn't enter the net but hit a post. It took referee Joe Cassidy of Calgary three minutes of consultation with the goal judge before declaring the puck had entered the goal.

The Regina team put up a strong fight, particularly Regina goalie Bernie Germaine who faced some difficult situations on the 39 Edmonton shots.

Oil Kings goalie Larry Hendrick faced the same number of drives in the hard-hitting, free-wheeling game. There were only 11 minor penalties, six to Edmonton.

Calgary Goalkeeper Tops All-Star Voting

NEW WESTMINSTER, (CP) — Goalkeeper John Davidson of Calgary Centennials led the way in league awards and all-star selections announced Friday by the Western Canada Hockey League.

Davidson was named best goaltender, garnering 18 of a possible 22 votes from team managers and coaches, took the award for most valuable player and was selected to the all-star team.

Teammate Jim Watson was voted best defenceman and was also picked for the team, while Dennis Sobchuk of Regina Pats took the rookie of the year award.

Runners-up were goalkeeper Bernie Germaine of Regina, Edmonton wingers Darcy Rota and Don Kozak, and defencemen Lawrence Sacharuk of Saskatoon Blades and Tom Bladon of Edmonton and Sobchuk.

Cup Finalists Still Avoiding Heavy Hitting

NEW YORK (CP) — There's nothing unusual in the pattern of play employed by the two teams involved in the Stanley Cup final.

Bobby Orr, Boston Bruins' Hart and Norris trophies winner, was asked to comment Friday on the style of game against New York Rangers in which the action has swung from wide-open, to tight-checking, to a free-skating game.

"If you go back over the season," replied the young defensive superstar, "you'll see this is the pattern of game we've had with New York."

Boston took the first two games of the best-of-seven series to decide the 1971-72 National Hockey League title at home, 6-5 and 2-1, and lost the third game here Thursday night, 5-2.

The two teams meet here again Sunday at 2 p.m. EDT.

"Im not a bit surprised at the style of play in the games so far," Orr said. "I've felt all along it was going to be a long series and I don't have any reason to change my thinking now."

HITTING NOT HARD

Surprising so far in the series has been the lack of bodily contact in a post-game round that was expected to produce much solid hitting, a game conducive to the success of both teams.

The three games to date have produced a lot of chippy play by both clubs, but no major infractions.

Emile Francis, New York's general manager-coach, said Friday the Ranger success in the third game was Boston's inability to solve the home team's power play.

"New York ice is longer than Boston (Garden) and the corners are deeper," Francis said. "This gives players on our power play more chances to manoeuvre and get the puck back to the point man.

"Because of its larger size (10 feet longer than Boston Garden) and the players' familiarity with the ice surface, this makes the Ranger power play work," Francis added by way of explaining the three early goals in Thursday's game when the Rangers scored with a manpower advantage.

Rangers' Jean Ratelle, awarded the Lady Byng Trophy as the NHL's player best combining ability and sportsmanship at Friday's annual award's luncheon here, was used sparingly by Francis after the first period after the New Yorkers gained a 3-1 lead.

"The early lead enabled us to rest Ratelle more than I intended. But, there's no sense pushing him when he wasn't needed."

Ratelle broke his ankle in a game March 1 and has since played only in the three games against Boston.

Bakers' Product On Rise

By JACK KEATING
Times Staff

Victoria McDonalds have never seriously experienced losing, but, beginning tonight, all that may change.

Then again, it may not.

The first test comes tonight as the Bakers open their maiden campaign in the Pacific Junior Lacrosse League at 8 p.m., facing Burnaby Cablevision at Memorial Arena.

McDonalds, who breezed to the Canadian junior "B" crown last year and who captured several B.C. age-group titles before that, are making the move into junior "A" ranks for the 1972 season.

TOUGH FOES

For their inauguration to the junior "A" ranks, coach Bill Munroe's charges couldn't have drawn a tougher opponent. Burnaby has finished first two years in a row and, according to coach Ron Delmonico, are "just as strong" as last season's club.

"We're expecting a real tough fight and we know they (Victoria) will be strong," commented Delmonico on tonight's game.

Munroe will second that motion. McDonalds goalie John Hamilton was the most valuable player in the national finals last year.

Most McDonalds' players have been together for eight seasons and Munroe is looking towards Jim Lynch, Glen Neuman and Norm Baker to provide the scoring punch.

Deane Hits For 5 Goals

Darrel Deane fired five goals Thursday night powering Esquimalt Teamsters to a 14-5 victory over Saanich E. J. Hunter in the opening game of the B.C. Intermediate Lacrosse League at Esquimalt Sports Centre.

Basil Rouault contributed three goals, Rick LaPointe and Kim Browning added a pair, and Jerry Cadwallader and Keith Treichel scored singles.

Al McLaren, Don Frenette, Steve Bowack, Greg Ross and Suk Johl scored for Saanich.

Glen Bradshaw, Davies Gain Final

Top-seeded Ted Davies and youthful Glen Bradshaw were slated to clash today at the Oak Bay Tennis Club in the men's singles final of the Victoria zone B.C. Festival of Sports tennis tournament.

Bradshaw, the 14-year-old Racquet Club ace, reached the final Friday by upsetting second-seeded Martin Taylor of Oak Bay in a tense, 0-6, 7-5, 7-6 struggle.

Davies remained in the title hunt by downing Oak Bay clubmate Max Low 6-2, 6-2.

Davies also reached the men's doubles final with a Friday triumph, combining with John Nichol for a 6-1, 6-2 decision over Low and Paul Moss.

The Racquet Club pair of Steve Auchinachie and Don Senese earned the other berth in the doubles final by clipping clubmates Walter Lysak and Garth Walther 6-2, 6-2.

Today's finals at the Oak Bay courtts were slated to start at 11 a.m. with the following matches:

Daffodil Dandies at Speedway

BOB GREGG
. . . 11th straight

Roy Smith of Victoria will be one of two Canadian-American Modified Racing Association drivers trying for a third Daffodil Cup victory when the 11th annual car-racing classic is presented by Western Speedway at the weekend.

The two-day, total-point affair will consist of a trophy dash, heats and a 50-lap main event this evening and a repeat program Sunday afternoon.

Smith, who was first to the checkered flag in the CAMRA-sanctioned race last year and in 1968, will be defending local honor along with running-mate Albert Smith and Ray Pottinger of Nanaimo.

Norm Ellefson of Spokane, the winner in 1966 and '67, will be the only other double winner returning to the fray.

Other double victories have been recorded by the late Victorian Billy Foster (1962-63) and Eldon Rasmussen (1961-65). Single race winners were Jim Malloy (1964) and Bud Gorder (1969).

The only driver entered who has seen action in all 10 previous races is Bob Gregg of Vancouver, Wash. Gregg has finished in the top five a number of times but is still looking for a victory. Another CAMRA veteran, George Robertson of Lewiston, Idaho, will be back after missing last season with a broken leg suffered early in the year on his home-town track.

Among the other CAMRA contenders will be Palmer Crowell of Hillsboro, Ore., the 1971 points champion; Bill Crow, a favorite with Victoria fans, from Boise, Idaho; Ken Hamilton, driver of the Grant King-built "Pink Lady" from Boise; and Calgarians Kay Lyon, Frank Weiss and Gary Miller.

Heading a large entry from the Washington Racing Association is John Tharp of Seattle, winner of two main events so far this season; Gordy Stewart of Alderwood Manor, winner of the 1971 modified Drivers' Challenge series; and Rebel Jackson, a strong Seattle driver familiar to many Victorians.

Also battling for the cup will be a Seattle-based brother combination. Bob McLees, a veteran midget driver challenging the CAMRA circuit this year, will by vying with younger brother Gerry, who campaigns in the WRA.

In time trials, beginning at 7 tonight and 1 p.m. Sunday, drivers will attempt to break the super-modified track record of 15.72 seconds, set during the Drivers' Challenge last year by Deak Lyndall of Lakeport, Calif.

The average speed for that time on the four-tenths of a mile oval is 91.7 miles per hour — making the straightaway speed about 120 mph.

GARY PLAYER'S GOLF CLASS: Pick out a spot

Hale's 67 Felt Like 77

HOUSTON (AP) — "I was just trying to get in the barn without falling apart," said Hale Irwin, admittedly surprised after taking a three-stroke lead midway through the $125,000 Houston open golf tournament.

Irwin, a quiet, serious young man from Boulder, Colo., had to do some frantic scrambling to post his second consecutive 67 and a 134 total Friday.

"It didn't feel like I shot 67," the 25-year-old said. "It feels more like I shot 77."

His 10-under-par total on the 6,998-yard Westwood Country Club course put him three strokes ahead of Chuck Thorpe, the rookie who led the first round, then slipped to a 71 despite an eagle three in the 13th hole. Thorpe had a 36-hole total of 137.

A small gallery showed up to watch the trick winds, with gusts up to 25 miles per hour, send scores higher in this event that is being shunned by most of the game's great stars.

Among the missing, for one reason or another, are Jack Nicklaus, Lee Trevino, Arnold Palmer, Billy Casper and Gary Player.

There was a group of five—including veterans Doug Sanders, Don January, and Australian Bruce Devlin—tied for third at 139. Also at that figure was Bob Payne.

Australian veteran Bruce Crampton, one of the hottest players on the tour this year, matched Irwin's 67-best score of the day—and moved into position at 141.

Wilf Homenuik of Winnipeg made the cut by a single stroke with a 74 for a 147 total. The Canadians who didn't make it were Ben Kern of Toronto with 73 for 148, Wayne Vollmer of Vancouver with 77 for 149 and George Knudson of Toronto with a 75 for 151.

Grealy Expects Paul's to Snarl

Victoria coach Frank Grealy expects a rough game Sunday when West-United and Paul's Canadians open the Pacific Coast Soccer League final series at Empire Stadium in Vancouver, starting at 2 p.m.

The second game of the two-game, total-goal series will be played the following Sunday in Victoria.

United edged Paul's for first place by one point despite losing their last outing to the mainland squad 2-0. United edged Paul's 3-2 in an earlier contest.

STOKES DOUBTFUL

Sergio Zanatta and Harold Hansen, two of the league's top snipers, could pose a problem for United's defence. Defensively, Vancouver rookie goalie Darryl Wallace led the league in shutouts, and he complements Paul's rugged defence.

Peter Robarts, who has turned into an excellnt utility player, will be filling in this weekend for Howie Anderson at right half. Anderson has been sidelined by a serious virus.

Dean Stokes, who scored the winning goal last weekend in a semi-final win over New Westminster Blues, has an injured foot and is a questionable starter for Victoria.

Bill-Paying Fan Hasn't Forgotten the Strike

NEW YORK (AP) — Baseball has been damaged by the first general strike in its history, a fact reflected by a decrease in attendance and a corresponding lowering of the esteem inwhich the players are held by the fans who foot the bill.

But any complete analysis of the effect of the strike on the sport awaits two dates:

The first is the beginning of June, when baseball weather is guaranteed and post-season playoffs in other sports have ended, enabling all involved to get a closer look at the reasons behind a drop in major league attendance of more than 300,000.

The second date probably will come after the World Series, but could come earlier, depending on when new negotiations begin on both the sticky pension issue that provoked the strike and the entire general agreement.

The decline in attendance and player esteem plus the question of what happens in the future were the major points coming out of an Associated Press study of the effects of the strike on the game, its players and its leaders.

That study showed:

1. Major league attendance is down 316,722 compared with the same number of playing dates last year; it is down more than that in the American League alone, with the National showing a slight increase.

2. The attendance fall possibly could affect the future of three clubs: St. Louis, San Diego and Texas.

3. There has been a call, by Minnesota owner Cal Griffith, for an earlier beginning of contract negotiations, possibly as early as June, so that the brink isn't reached as quickly as it was this year.

4. There has been a call, by Oakland owner Charles O. Finley, to offset any damage to the game by the strike with the institution of changes to make the sport "more interesting and entertaining."

The problem of the drop in attendance is major, but an optimistic outlook comes from commissioner Bowie Kuhn, who uses a measuring stick that shows average per-date attendance up 12 per cent.

"If you take the point where the season started this year and compare it with a comparable period last season (two weeks into the season), attendance is up 12 per cent. And that's despite some above-average weather problems."

No one, however, contends there hasn't been a negative reaction by the fans.

"The baseball public found the strike distasteful and unfortunate," said Mike Burke, president of New York Yankees. "What the long-range effect would be, I don't know. But, if by the middle of June, attendance hasn't picked up, I'd be concerned."

That the fans have found the players off base, whether rightly or wrongly, seems evident from several incidents, such as the booing of popular Brooks Robinson at Baltimore and the Reds in Cincinnati.

Frank Cashen, general manager of the Orioles, said some fans had even cancelled season tickets.

"Those who cancelled," he explained, "indicated they did so because the players were greedy—if that's the right word —and they didn't choose to continue supporting the amount of money the players get in salary and also from the pension."

Marvin Miller, executive director of the players' association, sees fan response as a natural reaction to the owners' propaganda during the strike.

"A number of owners didn't realize until too late what they were doing," Miller said.

"Where management runs its players down in a normal business, it has no important effect on sales of its product. But when it runs down its product in baseball—where the players are the product—I'd be surprised if there wasn't some impact."

The average player makes $29,000 a year, not more in one year than the average working American makes in a lifetife, and the players' pension plan is supported, not by gate receipts, but by a share of national television revenue, he said.

St. Louis, San Diego and Texas have been hard hit.

Cardinals president August Busch has hinted at a possible sale of the club. The Padres have not been averaging the 10,000 they say they need to remain in San Diego. The Rangers' attendance in their new Texas home compares unfavorably with what they were drawing at this stage of the 1971 season in Washington.

Finley is hopeful of a return to normal—but even so is pressing for change.

"I think the time is ripe now to make plans for 1973 for steps to improve the game," Finley said.

"Do you know there has been no major change since three strikes were adopted in 1887 and four balls in 1889? If we have lost any fans because of baseball's image being hurt by the strike, we must win them back and more."

Finley's methods include inter-league play between the American and National leagues and the use of a pinch-hitter for the pitcher without his being taken out of the game.

GARDENING
jack beastall

Several articles have appeared in this column suggesting a patio or sitting-out place where the family can relax, eat, play games, pursue hobbies or work.

Questions and comments resulting from the columns would indicate that owners of small gardens consider a patio an enormous amount of work at a prohibitive cost.

At one time it was necessary to construct forms and pour concrete, but this labor has been eliminated. All that is needed today is a sheet of black plastic, a load of sand, and enough prefabricated cement blocks to cover the desired area.

Different local producers refer to these as slabs, stones, pavement squares, or patio blocks, the distinction being mainly the size, the thickness, or the smooth and textured surfaces.

It will be noted that each section of the chart contains a full block and a half block, the latter having one dimension exactly one-half of the former.

To construct a patio, the first job is to remove the soil to a depth of four inches if the surface is to be level with the surrounding ground.

In this area where heavy rainfall is experienced over winter, it is wise to provide for a gentle slope so that excess water will not collect in puddles.

The excavated area is then made fairly smooth and covered with black plastic film which can be purchased in widths to 10 feet.

On top of the plastic we put a two-inch layer of sand which is moistened, compacted, and levelled.

A good levelling tool is a piece of four-inch board nailed to the end of a handle, similar to the scrapers used for snow removal but considerably wider.

Next is the laying of the blocks. In this part of the job there are two things I have found helpful:

(1) Don't work standing on the sand. Lay the first line of blocks standing on solid ground and the second and succeeding lines standing on blocks already in place. If you must work from the sand surface stand on long heavy planks.

(2) Use strips of one-inch thick lumber between the blocks when laying, leaving them loose enough for removal after each block is set. This gives an equal spacing between blocks and is much easier than trying to gauge the position with the eye.

When the area is covered it is wise to walk on the blocks, and let the children play on them, for a week or so to permit settling. If any blocks sink it will be necessary to add a little more sand beneath. Don't attempt striking with a hammer.

As soon as the surface is settled and level, pour dry topping-mix into the spaces between each block, then moisten the entire surface with a fine mist of water from the garden hose.

Don't use a heavy jet of water because it will wash out the topping mix. Continue misting at intervals until the mix is thoroughly moistened. Leave for 24 hours before walking on the surface.

One thing that strikes me about home-built patios is the total lack of imagination in the making of a design or pattern with the blocks.

A mass of blocks all one size makes a patio that seems out of proportion in a small garden. It forces itself on the vision and seems to dominate the picture.

By using blocks of different sizes arranged in a pattern to suit the surrounding garden, the patio can appear to shrink in size yet be of ample proportions for family enjoyment.

To obtain the most pleasing design, take a sheet of stiff paper or thin cardboard and rule it into squares and oblongs using one-inch to represent one foot. Cut the shapes carefully with scissors or an Xacto knife.

Next, cut a sheet to represent the size of the patio using the same scale of one inch to represent one foot, then while away a few pleasant hours moving the cutouts around until you have a design that satisfied.

Children love game like this. You may be surprised to discover that the uninhibited mind of a 10-year-old can whip up a design faster than the more sophisticated teenager, and in one-tenth of the time needed by the unimaginative preoccupied mind of an adult.

In the illustration the large sketch at the bottom is based on blocks 24 inches square, half blocks 12 inches one side, and the narrower 8x24 size. It would be possible to work in a pattern with 12x12 blocks.

If you would like planters, or flower beds, in the patio, or along the edges, you will find the makers of patio blocks also have lengths of curbing for edging, 45 degree blocks for surrounding trees, and so-called chimney caps and chimney liners which can be adapted for single plants or small raised urn effects.

For those contemplating a patio or sitting-out area, I suggest as a first step contacting the various manufacturers to see at first-hand the numerous cement products that can be adapted to the design and layout.

Future columns will include some of these products together with blocks for walks and stepping stone paths, plus fences, screens and dividers constructed from another popular cement item, the ornamental screen block.

WORK FOR WEEK

Indoor grown seedlings which have been pricked out into flats or separate containers of soil, mut all be gradually accustomed to outdoor conditions before being planted in the garden.

Dahlia tubers without long green shoots can be planted.

Continue training of standard fuchsias or geraniums by rubbing off all side shoots as they appear until dsired height attained; then pinch out top growing tip to form branching head.

Watering in greenhouse needs care — if no heat at night, water in morning if needed. Don't water on overcast days except for individual plants or pots needing to recover from transplanting. Ventilate freely for all plants which are to go outdoors.

After soil preparation, sow peas, a few carrots, swiss chard, summer spinach, onions and lettuce — all except peas in small quantities so that a few more can be sown in two weeks time to keep up the supply all summer.

Thin out parsnips and other sowings made earlier.

Planned Development of Parks Urged

One of Canada's fastest growing pollution problems is the litter left behind by tourists.

And Canada must act quickly to solve the problem before the countryside and parks are ruined, Lawrence Ecroyd, executive vice-president of the Travel Industry of Canada, said in Victoria Friday night.

He urged speedy construction of complete tourist services in parks and other frequently-travelled areas. But the hotels, gas stations, coffee shops and rest rooms should be built in concentrated areas and not scattered helter skelter across the countryside.

A tourist should be able to find all the services he needs at one stop and then when he moves on he should be travelling through wilderness and unspoilt nature. At all costs ribbon development of services through parks must be avoided, he said.

Ecroyd was interviewed following his arrival to put finishing touches on his association's national convention which opens Sunday at the Empress and runs to Wednesday. About 275 delegates are expected.

"We are not travel agents," he said. "We are people engaged in the tourist business: hotels, transportation, food services. Our organization encourages and promotes travel in Canada."

Upon returning to Ottawa he plans to take up with federal parks officials the need for complete tourist facilities at Vancouver Island's Long Beach. Further pollution of the beach can be avoided, he said, if more restrooms are constructed before the height of the tourist season.

More campers and trailers would be travelling across Canada this summer and they were welcome but people using them must be educated on the importance of keeping the countryside clean.

He said parks must have complete services to handle these campers and tents but at the same time the tourist's free ride should be ended. Parks should recover the costs of the services through reasonable fees.

Despite the pollution problem, travel is a vital industry in Canada, he said, accounting for $4 billion annually. Of that amount about $1.3 billion comes from the United States and other countries. At the same time, he noted, Canadians spend $1.45 billion anually in visits to foreign countries.

"I am not one of those people who criticize tourists for going abroad," Ecroyd said. "But I think it is a sad thing if a Canadian spends all his holidays in the United States and never gets to know his own country."

The convention starts Sunday afternoon with a board of directors meeting and a reception. Panel presentations begin Monday morning with association president F. G. Brander as general chairman.

Panelists will be Paul Rodney, publisher of Canadian Travel News in Toronto, Dennis Gill, president of Suntours, Toronto, and R. C. Kenmuir, vice-president of Baker, Lovick, BBDO Ltd., Vancouver.

Ernest Dichter, president of the Institute of Motivational Research, New York, was scheduled to appear but will be unable to come to Victoria. His speech will be read to the session.

Federal Industry, Trade and Commerce Minister Jean-Luc Pepin will address the dinner meeting at 7:30 p.m. Monday.

Wage Settlements Increase

Collectively-bargained wage settlements in the first quarter of 1972 showed a higher rate of increase than those for the first quarter of 1971, the federal labor department reports.

Settlements during the first quarter produced average annual increases in base rates of 9.7 per cent in compound terms compared with 7.7 per cent in the same quarter last year.

The figures are based on an analysis of contracts covering 500 or more workers in industries other than construction.

Base rate increases averaged 11.2 per cent in the first year, 7.9 per cent in the second and 6.9 per cent in the third for three-year contracts; 11.7 per cent for the first year and 8.4 per cent in the second for two-year agreements; and 8.9 per cent in one-year agreements.

He Used His Pen To Save Our Wilds

By ARTHUR MAYSE

One day when this century was much younger, a pioneer Canadian conservationist addressed students in a Vancouver junior high school. A Victoria woman who was a girl in that audience recalls him very clearly.

"He wore moccasins and fringed buckskins,", she says. "His hair was in two braids wrapped in leather strips that gave off little gleams when he moved. I got the impression that they were beaded. He was tall, and he had a wonderful face, and his voice was very soft. I remember he told us that he'd been a trapper, but had become a friend of wild creatures, especially the beaver."

TALES OF AN EMPTY CABIN. SAJO AND THE BEAVER PEOPLE. MEN OF THE LAST FRONTIER. PILGRIMS OF THE WILD. By Grey Owl. Macmillan paperbacks. $2.95 to $3.95 each.

The lecturer in buckskin was Grey Owl, an adopted son of the north-country Ojibway who with pen and voice achieved fame as an interpreter of the wilderness in which much of his life was spent.

Certain areas of that life are hardly less obscure than the trails and canoe routes he travelled, and the controversy as to his origins that came to a rolling boil immediately after his death gave the debunkers a field-day.

But in his own way he was one of Canada's great men, and in this era of environmental concern, the re-issue of Grey Owl's books by Macmillan of Canada comes as a timely undertaking.

All four won international readership for a writer who regarded authorship as only part of his larger mission. Two of his titles — Pilgrims of the Wild and Sajo and Her Beaver People, both first published in 1935 — have never lapsed out of print.

The other two, Tales of an Empty Cabin (1936) and The Men of the Last Frontier (his first venture into book-lengths in 1931) are well worth another go-round.

Macmillan caps the sequence with A Book of Grey Owl, which contains selections from his works. It was brought out shortly after the author's death.

The modern reader may find his approach over-ornate and often tinged with sentimentality. If Grey Owl was a romantic, however, he was also a realist. As a close observer and faithful reporter of animal ways, he rates high. Above all, he is eminently readable: this reviewer found that the passage of time had not robbed the books of their remembered magic.

The woodsman who set them down, first in longhand and later by hunt-and-peck on a typewriter he never learned to love, manages to remain something of an enigma. Though he tells a good deal about himself, he does not reveal all.

We know that he came to northern Ontario in 1905 or thereabouts as a footloose 17-year-old. The name he brought with him was Archie Belaney.

Among freighters and whitewater men more concerned with a man's abilities than his blood-lines, he identified himself as the son of an Apache mother and a Scottish-born scout serving with the United States army in the 1880's.

If young Belaney actually happened to be an English boy who had dreamed single-mindedly from childhood of becoming a Canadian Indian, the deception was both a harmless and a fortunate one. For an Ojibway he became, and so successfully that he excelled even his woods-wise mentors in the skills of the forest Indian.

He ran his traplines. He worked as guide and fire ranger, and refers briefly to his combat service as a sniper in the First World War. Returned to the Ontario north, he met Anahareo, a Mohawk of the Iroquois people 20 years his junior.

Their union was not without its storms. But they lived and toiled as partners, and it was Anahareo's compassion for a pair of beaver kittens no less than the pricklings of Grey Owl's own conscience that drove him to abandon trapping as a livelihood.

▣

The story of the hard times that followed — the shared wanderings and the eventual recognition accorded to Grey Owl as an eloquent pleader for nature's creatures — is told in Pilgrims of the Wild.

For the man who became Indian in all but birth, the trail ended in 1938. Heavy lecture schedules in Britain and the United States had left him dangerously exhausted.

He yearned for Beaver Lodge, his lakeside cabin-plus-beaver colony in Prince Albert National Park, Saskatchewan. But the return to the wilds which were always his true home failed to restore him. Taken to hospital in Prince Albert, he died of pneumonia at the age of 50.

Largely through his efforts, the hard-pressed beaver was given protection adequate to ensure its survival as something more than a national symbol. As for Grey Owl, the pen was a tool that served his conservationist purposes.

He was much more than a propagandist in moccasins, however, and his writings bear witness to that fact. Canadians with a feeling for the outdoors will find his books no less rewarding than they were in their earlier editions.

Fond Memories of a Legendary Father

Grey Owl, the best friend a beaver ever had, was by no means a solitary of the bush. Anahareo shared good years and bad with him, and even though the daughter they named Dawn finds it hard to separate the man from his legend, she remembers her father fondly.

The child whose earliest playmates were wild creatures is now Mrs. Shirley Dawn Bruce of Clearwater, B.C.

"I was too small to know him very well," Mrs. Bruce recalled on a recent visit to Victoria, "but I loved him a great deal, and my mother always had a very special tone to her voice when she spoke of 'Archie.' She reconstructed him for me, and she was the one he asked for before he died."

Dawn was then six years old. Anahareo and Grey Owl had gone their separate ways.

"There was the difference in age," Mrs. Bruce said in explanation of the parting. "But more than that, he was preoccupied with his writing. He was a dedicated man, with time only for his writing and for the beaver."

For Anahareo, the settled life in a national park cabin was too tame. Trained to the woods, she had become a prospector in her own right. She yearned to be on the move again. In later years, she was to make formidable lone journeys over the canoe and portage routes of the north.

Anahareo, whose first account of her years with Grey Owl is long out of print, offers a more detailed story in a new book, The Devil in Deerskins, on the New Press publication list for this spring.

"A strange man," says Mrs. Bruce of the father she thinks of as Grey Owl rather than as the Archibald Stansfield Belaney who was born in Hastings, England. "I've been working for years to see that another generation gets a chance to read his books."

A convinced British Columbian since 1961, she offers an observation made by Grey Owl when he visited this coast.

"I've never seen the forest that I dreamed of," said the woodsman who mourned the passing of the wilderness, "but forty years ago, I would have found it here."

Black Comedy, Violence

By ANTHONY JENKINS

Judging by the work of these three young writers, the American novel is no longer a cosy affair. Each is wildly inventive, blackly comic and violent in its sexuality: a sharp slap in the face of conventionality.

The Late Great Creature struck me as the most successful of the three. It's a clever tour de force, but it is also tightly controlled by the styles of its various narrators and so never tips over into self-indulgence.

THE PROSELYTIZER, by D. Keith Mano. Random House. $8.25.

HERMES 3000, by William Kotzwinkle. Random House. $6.95.

Part of the book purports to be the working papers of a writer who hopes to give his sagging career a new direction through a feature interview with Simon Moro, an actor whose performances in horror-movies have made him a classic of the screen.

The interviewer, Warner Williams, is literate, professional, self-mocking and cynical; not the sort of person to be taken in by a transylvanian vampire. Yet when one comes to the diary of Moro himself, one finds oneself misled by Williams' point of view. The novel does an about face and is suddenly about much bigger things. Moro's attempt to promote his latest picture, "The Raven", becomes a way of trying to shock America out of its jaded malaise.

Brock Brower mixes real events and actual personalities in with the lives of his fictional characters. His plot is a constant shape-shifter, so that the Hollywood horror-movie evolves into an image for the American horror-life. Bits of the book are grand-guignol, other parts read like a confidential expose, but it all adds up to a devastating experience, an antic satire on modern America.

D. K. Mano's The Proselytizer finds a parallel between three types of zealot: The religious militant who seeks to convert and save; The sexual Don Juan who is out to add more conquests to his collection; the actor in a TV commercial who woos buyers for his sponsor's product. These three are blended into the personality of Kris Lane, the driving force behind the Church of the Resurrection in the town of New Faith.

Lane's grotesquerie, the thin line between his saintliness and demonism, is nicely juxtaposed against the muddleheaded ordinariness of David Smith, a gentle failure who lives across the street from Lane's electronic mansion.

Eventually, however the wild extravaganza of the plot and its fierce sexuality tends to throw the satire off-balance.

Hermes 300 proceeds at a much gentler pace. Each chapter is made up of episodes from the lives of characters who stretch across time and space, from Catherine the Great to an old woman in the Golden Cafeteria on Broadway. During the course of the book, each of these people finds some sort of revelation, usually through sexual fulfilment or through death.

But the main idea, that all time and place are one, is unfortunately neither new nor exciting. Consequently the strands of these stories tend to fall apart, and most of them are not sufficiently developed to be able to stand on their own. Such over-involved treatment makes the book seem pretentious.

BITS, PIECES

By ANNE McDOUGALL

This is a deceptive little book that starts so flatly — almost like the Prairie it is set on — that you feel like putting it down.

Mrs. Maynard writes well, and honestly, about her own growing-up in small Saskatchewan and Manitoba towns, but she doesn't organize her reminiscences very well. You are left with bits and pieces of family life showing the fine old father and mother from Russia who open stores in Norwegian and Ukrainian communities in the undying hope that their two daughters will improve their lot, go on to university, marry well.

RAISINS AND ALMONDS, by Fredelle Bruser Maynard. Doubleday. $6.50.

The detail, the dialogue, the situations are very vivid: Christmas when Fredelle's mother makes new clothes for the doll she already owns so she won't be left out of Santa's distribution at school; apple strudel at home, skating in icy Winnipeg.

The author introduces her own comments on Prairie life in the Depression and War years, as she looks back on it from her home in New Hampshire where she lives with her husband, an Anglo-Indian, and two daughters. She remembers the stings her Jewishness brought her. The are overshadowed, in retrospect, by the pride supplied mostly by her dignified father.

The book makes up a little piece of the mosaic of this country. The chapters read like a collection of magazine pieces, which some of them were.

The Shadows Haunting Canadian Jews

By GEORGE OAKE

Reading Stuart Rosenberg's second volume on the Canadian Jewish community is like staggering through the Jewish yellow pages of some mythical Canadian cultural compendium.

It is as if the author decided to let his fingers do the thinking. More than half the book is devoted to listing prominent Canadian Jews in everything from business to ballet. A similar fault afflicted Rosenberg's first volume, which I described in the Times of Dec. 12, 1970, as a compendium of names strung together by two centuries of good deeds.

"Laszlo Gati, born in Hungary, is conductor of the Victoria Symphony Orchestra in British Columbia. Preceeding that, he was violinist with the Montreal Symphony and had conducted for the CBC."

Now I don't know if Rabbi Rosenberg has ever met Maestro Gati. From the way that dry little squib reads I suspect not. It sounds as if Rosenberg was constructing a city directory from a computer tape and had one paragraph to go before coffee break.

THE JEWISH COMMUNITY IN CANADA, Vol. 2, by Stuart Rosenberg. McClelland and Stewart. $15.95.

I am not being parochial by citing Gati; other accomplished Canadians are dismissed with even fewer words.

But once you've satisfied youself that friends and neighbors have received their obligatory paragraphs, there is much to ponder here.

Rosenberg makes no bones about the fact that Canada's Jewish community has more problems than a menorah has candles. Unfortunately, the author only lights the candles briefly, and then snuffs them out in the next chapter with a breathless list of good guys.

But enough light is shed on such things as the Americanization of the Canadian Jewish community, prejudice in high places and intermarriage to show that some very long shadows haunt Canadian Jews.

While national Jewish-Christian marriage rates remained relatively low and steady until the early 50s, they shot up astronomically in the last decade. Saskatchewan and Alberta, for example, showed a 14 per cent Jewish-Christian marriage rate until the 50s. By 1960 the rate had zoomed to 35 per cent.

Between 1921 and 1960 the highest Jewish-Christian marriage rate was found in British Columbia where 27 per cent of Jewish men and 14.5 per cent of Jewish women outmarried. A figure which, sad to say, is probably less a reflection of tolerance than an isolated and relatively small Jewish community.

Rosenberg's reasons for the exodus are somewhat murky. Among other things he blames breakdown of parental authority and increased numbers of young Jews attending university.

To give Rosenberg his due he raises the anti-semitism issue, but only fleetingly. Admitting Jewish influence in television and radio management has been slight, he writes: "Although Jews have been active producing, directing, writing and performing in Canadian radio and television, no Jew has ever been appointed a major official in administration or policy making at the CBC," with the possible exception of Sydney Newman.

Rosenberg quotes an anonymous 1970 Royal commission: "discrimination, or anticipation of discrimination, still influences the occupational distribution of Jews."

And despite the fact that "Jews are the most highly educated group in the country," that revisionist of Canadian myths, John Porter, has written, "Their high representation in the higher occupational levels should not be confused with power, as it sometimes is."

If anti-semitism is festering behind the computers and television cameras why doesn't Rosenberg expose it? A few hints here and there and then the text gallops off with a herd of good guys again.

But even the good guys are worried about the Americanization of Canadian Jewry. Canada's cultural mosaic — unlike the American melting pot — tended to keep Jewish ethnicity intact in past generations. Now rabbis are imported from the United States, rather than Europe, and Jews, like other Canadians, are joining the Pepsi generation in droves.

An example: In the 1941 census there was only a 1.5 percentile difference between Jews who reported themselves as Jewish by religion and those called themselves Jewish by ethnic origin. By the 1961 census 32 per cent of Canadian Jews reported themselves as Jewish only by religion.

"As of 1961, one-third of Canadian Jewry had apparently opted for an American self-definition — congregation and religious oriented — rather than the ethnic style of earlier Canadian generations," Rosenberg writes.

Rosenberg claims that about 8,000 of the estimated 30,000 American draft resisters in Canada are Jewish. Understating community concern for the new iconoclasts in the community's midst, he writes, "... relatively few of these south to identify with the Canadian Jewish community ... they tended to regard their Jewishness as a marginal element in their lives."

More than 2,000 years ago Jewish scholars in ancient Greece voiced the same fears about assimilation in an overpowering culture. Jewish traditions did survive, while much of what was good in Greek thinking — including the nation state — seem to be disappearing in the larger Western culture.

If Canadian Jews are worried about their special cultural traditions, it is time the rest of Canada worried about its rather shaky identity.

Teacups, Politics and Money

By TORCHY ANDERSON

Unless you were an old Victorian, of the vintage of hearts of oak holding an outpost of Empire, you might not recognize the name Cary Castle. Today it is generally referred to as Government House, a place of dignity and hospitality. It is occupied by the lieutenant - governor, always a man (up to now!) appointed in name by the governor-general of Canada — in fact by the party government currently in power at Ottawa.

THE MEN AT CARY CASTLE, by S. W. Jackman. Morriss Printing. $6.95.

The lieut.-governor is supposed to be above politics but S. W. Jackman's little volume makes it clear this aloof pattern was not always followed. When it was not there were ructions. Of the 21 men to hold the office one was dismissed before his term was over; one attracted an angry mob to the official residence, one was hanged in effigy. The job was not always teacups and cucumber sandwiches.

The name Cary Castle comes from George Huntly Cary, who built the place as a residence before there was a lieutenant-governor. The first took office in 1871.

The job calls for the incumbent to spend more than his official salary. He can, and in some cases has, been extremely lavish in entertainment and therefore popular with that part of society which likes to think of itself with a capital S.

And the social freeloaders are seldom absent. Those who spent the most money were often the most popular and those who did not were often regarded as mean. Going down the list you will find that George Pearkes was possibly the hardest worker at his job and the most popular. He did not attain it by spending; he made himself part of British Columbia life.

The men who ruled Cary Castle, sometimes with rather a dominant assist from a determined wife, were generally from the ranks of successful business. Usually, but not always, they were of the stripe of the party in power in Ottawa.

The list includes one who introduced fox hunting around Ashcroft, Clement Francis Cornwall. He brought hounds from England and a coyote played the fox. Another incumbent's humble appearance once got him mistaken for the gardener.

Cary Castle has always been the social centre for Victoria, sometimes for all British Columbia. The lieutenant-governor's most spectacular job is opening a session of the legislature. In the bad, bitter old days some members once walked out on the royal representative in the middle of his speech.

Cary Castle

But usually everything goes off with well planned, well oiled smoothness. The "opening" means a whirl of social activity. Society, political and financial, primps, preens and parades.

Your reviewer, as a political reporter, made many trips from Vancouver to Victoria for "the opening." Most of them were made on the beloved "midnight boat," leaving Vancouver at midnight, arriving in Victoria at 7 a.m. The ship carried politicians, politicians' wives, business Big Shots and their wives, lobbyists, job searchers. It was often a full boat in more than one sense.

This book is valuable as a historical reference and the author manages to bring his subjects to life.

How to Avoid A Turkey

There is a constantly recurring question that is put to anyone in the arts-entertainment business that the questioner feels is in a position to come up with an instant answer.

Why is it so difficult to get audiences out in this city?

For any type of event — pop groups and classical recitals included.

And the answer is that there is no positive answer.

No one absolute, dead-on-target factor that will provide an instant key to the situation. The best anyone can do is provide clues to a number of probable factors.

But we still can't gurantee that by marshalling all the factors the audience will come pouring in to any given event.

Not all events suffer neglect. The symphony draws big audiences for its regular season and special attractions; Victoria Operatic and Theatre Guild frequently fill their respectively smaller houses and Bastion Theatre audiences began to build satisfactorily last season.

But many other city-based organizations are abysmally less successful. Some have disappeared and more will likely follow as a result of insufficient audience support.

The first factor that I mention when the question is fired at me is lack of promotion. Almost no one — and I don't except the sponsors of professional events — seems to understand quantity, quality or psychology when it comes to promotion.

Example: A folk and country singer of some international repute is scheduled to appear on a major city concert stage.

The promotion consists of a minimum of ads, plus possibly a few posters scattered around town. And to the media a handbill setting forth the bare facts out of which, it was presumed, a quantity of enticing advance publicity could be conjured. Nothing to fill in the outline. No photographs.

And then disappointed wails when less than 100 people trickled into the theatre on the night of the event.

That, believe me, is no isolated instance. Is has happened hundreds of times in the past.

It could happen again as soon as Sunday, at McPherson Playhouse where the visit of the Irish Rovers has been kept, for some inscrutable reason, a closely guarded secret.

So, lesson number one: Think twice about launching any event if your budget, your energies and your invention are not up to creating a barrage of publicity. Otherwise you're underwriting failure.

Among other factors are timing — don't insert a folk festival event into the middle of a month when a major folk spectacle has already been scheduled.

To the purists the two events may be total contrasts, but to the general public a folk event is a folk event.

Claiming ignorance of the conflict until too late to alter plans is a weak excuse. All auditoriums and theatres as well as the Community Arts Council of Greater Victoria (listed in the telephone directory) keep schedules. Half a dozen phone calls and you have the facts.

★ ★ ★

Another factor could be to do some boning up on group psychology. It's possible with a bit of study to find some pretty good clues as to what is most likely to overcome the general evening inertia of people — such as curiosity, stimulation of the senses through visual impact or through visual impact combined with full rich and various-textured sound, the sort one receives from an orchestra.

Without claiming to know the whole answer, the clues suggest why recitals are attended by a few dedicated people but don't draw crowds.

Too little curiosity is roused except in the instance of some world-renowned figure. In which case the record buffs come out of the woodwork by the hundreds, avid to see and hear in the flesh a favorite from their world of radio or TV.

There is also the factor of hard cash. And it's a big one. Most people operate on an entertainment budget and when they've spent so much in any one month, that's it. Tickets plus transportation plus, in many cases, a baby-sitting tab, add up.

★ ★ ★

Then there are such things as reputation — "this outfit always gives a great show," or, "These people have given a bunch of turkeys up to now."

That's why it's important to avoid turkeys. You might be forgiven one in five, but not two in four. At least one impresario of the past lost his grip on local concert goers for just that reason.

Finally, if you're in the stage show business, remember one thing — the dress rehearsal should be considered as "opening night." Never, never allow the opening night to become "dress rehearsal."

The guy who pays two bucks for his seat on opening night has a right to see the same quality show as the one who sits in the same seat toward the end of the run.

It can be done, even by amateurs. All it takes is a total dedication of time, talent and energy from all concerned.

And if you're not prepared to make that dedication, then you're in the wrong business and have no right to expect the public to support you.

Opera Workshop Created

A new, unprecedented and highly promising project will spring up under the Conservatory of Music umbrella when the 1972-73 school year opens in September.

This will be an opera workshop department. The instructors will be the noted teacher and vocal artist, Catherine Young, and Dale Read.

Mrs. Read is a young actress-director whose impressive credits include a BA with a major in theatre dramatics from the University of California, Berkely, an MA in theatre arts from San Francisco State College and special studies with Andrez Wirth of the famed Berliner Ensemble.

With the Berkeley Repertory Company and in San Francisco Mrs. Read has encompassed a considerable range of roles as well as directing major productions.

In the short time that she has been in Victoria with her husband, bassoonist Jesse Read, she has directed the successful Uvic department of music production of Menotti's The Medium.

The workshop will occupy five hours a week in two parts. Two hours will be spent with Mrs. Young in musical preparation and three with Mrs. Read.

Depending on enrolment, the class will be divided into sections of not more than 10 students each, thus allowing for intensive individual study.

Over the first few months the dramatic part of the workshop will be exclusively concerned with isolated problems in operatic dramatic study.

Students will explore through structured exercises and improvisation the basic elements of drama and will then proceed to implement their learning through scene studies.

These scenes will be the material of the musical workshop also. The scene studies will not be performance-oriented.

The final project of the workshop will be, however, production of an opera to be performed in May of the ensuing year. Workshop hours will then become part of a rehearsal schedule and the opera will be the project of both parts of the opera workshop.

Hawaiian Students Visit City

Twenty students from the tiny Hawaiian village of Hana will visit Victoria Friday.

For them the trip is a first visit to continental North America. It is a dream come true and the reward for a lot of hard work and saving.

The students, whose average age is 17, and whose village's total population is 750, have achieved an almost-miracle by raising $7,000, assisted by the generosity of a few individuals.

With their four chaperones they will arrive Monday in Seattle, then travel by bus to Vancouver and over to Victoria as part of their two-week trip.

The group will give a song and dance performance Friday in the auditorium of Central Junior Secondary School, starting at 7:30 p.m.

There will be no admission charge but a collection will be taken to assist in defraying tour expenses.

AMITY CONCERT

Several aspects of ensemble singing will be explored by Amity Singers in a concert to be directed by George Corwin, May 15 in the MacLaurin Building auditorium.

The annual scholarship program will have as guest artists soprano Erika Jurth and baritone Ron Bermingham.

Only two numbers — Mendelssohn's Hear My Prayer and Six Songs for mixed voices from Gilbert and Sullivan — will have piano accompaniment.

The rest of the program will be sung a capella (unaccompanied) and will reveal the ensemble in various combinations from the female voices in Kodaly's Mountain Nights and male voices in five Slovak folk songs by Bartok, to the six-part chorus, Wherefore is the Light Bestowed, by Brahms. Also on the program will be madrigals and psalms.

The concert begins at 8 p.m. Tickets available at the door or from Amity members.

SYMPHONY STARS

The 32nd season of the Victoria Symphony has already been shaped up under the imaginative guidance of Laszlo Gati, and from a quick preview it looks great.

In fact it looks as though this could be the season, beyond all others when being a symphony season ticket holder with its pleasures and privileges will be worth double the price.

Among the guest artists who are returning are those who have made the greatest impression in recent seasons — Ronald Turini, Bela Siki, Masuko Ushioda and the duo piano team of Robin Wood and Winifred Scott.

Some of those making their first appearance are the great Austrlian contralto, Lauris Elms, the Soviet pianist, Alexei Nasedkin, and the flawless Spanish guitarist, Narciso Yepes.

Then there is that giant of the music world, Yehudi Menuhin, who will be guest with the orchestra in an extraordinary concert in January.

And included in special concerts and presentations, the Vienna Boys Choir, the Ballet Nacional de Buenos Aires performing the entire Romeo and Juliet ballet and the Vancouver Bach Choir conducted by Simon Streatfeild in Bach's B minor Mass.

Special attractions are the Canadian Opera Company in Mozart's Cosi fan Tutte, the Royal Winnipeg Ballet and Ciro and his Ballet Flamenco.

Ottawa Aid for Galleries

State Secretary Gerard Pelletier, speaking in Calgary, outlined the formation of a National Museums Corporation, a system of affiliated museums financed and maintained by Ottawa.

"The government is the principal patron of the arts," Pelletier said. This statement rings with double truth; the Canada Council formed in 1958 has long been Canada's Medici. The Museum Corporation now extends the federal commitment to art.

The collections in the National Museum of Art and in the Museum of man, prevously accessible only to the people of Ottawa, would be decentralized, distributed on a rotating basis to federal gallery wings built onto existing civic museums across the country.

Where no facilities presently exist, the Corporation will build National Exhibition Centres, small galleries without a permanent collection, geared to the display of circulating shows.

Not all objects in the National collection are travelworthy. Old master panel paintings and the other delicacies might not survive being crated and circulated to affiliate museums. Presumably these would stay in Ottawa under intensive care.

During the first year of the five year program $500,000 will be invested in Museumobiles, museums on truck chassis which will deliver art to the smallest community.

Certainly no treasures will bounce around inside museumobiles. Sturdy and relatively inexpensive prints will be purchased from Canadian artists and commercial galleries to the tune of $150,000.

The corporation has a budget of $9.4 million for 1972-73. Some $500,000 goes to existing National Museums for extension services, and the same amount will be available for a nation-wide inventory of important objects in public collections. There is a $1 million emergency fund for purchase of historically significant objects in danger of being sold outside the country.

Three restoration and conservation laboratories will be established, financed to the tune of $1.65 million. Any museum can apply for a piece of a $1.5 million fund to upgrade their present conservation facilities. And finally, $2 million will build five to 10 associate museums within the coming 12 months. A total of 40 museums are planned.

In building federal wings on to civic gallerys, providing exhibitions, maintenance funds and staff, Ottawa will want to watch over its investment. The plan to decentralize and to even out cultural disparity actually involves some centralized administration and bureaucracy.

Colin Graham of the Victoria Gallery feels that the secretary of state is aware of the danger to the autonomy of host museums. New wings would not be of sufficient size to warrant another curator whose allegiance was to Ottawa. Though Ottawa will have some say, occasional inspections will probably be the only imposition on local administrators.

Graham hopes his gallery will host an affiliate museum wing but he does not expect to be approached until midway in the five-year program. Areas of large population are first on the list.

PELLETIER
. . . guides program

The Museums Corporation in no way comes as a surprise to Canadian Museum Directors. Two years ago they met in Ottawa at the secretary of state's invitation and told of their financial problems. They said $64 million was needed immediately. The directors suggested that Ottawa match dollar for dollar capital expenditures and acquisitions. But this system would only have accelerated existing museums quick to raise money and earn the grants. Cultural disparity would have become worse.

Pelletier's present solution would establish National Exhibition Centres in towns where there is at least the basis for a demand. Some $750,000 will be available on a local incentives basis for art organizations in small towns to build their own gallery or to renovate some existing facility.

No doubt these galleries will be appreciated by those who build them and by others, but in towns without the cushion of a broadly based commitment, the existence of Exhibition Centres would be tenuous. Fortunately the federal government will help administer and maintain the facilities.

Hopefully the new federal commitment will not encourage civil leaders to adopt a "Let Ottawa do it" policy. The National Museums Corporation will not cure all cultural ills, but it does recognize a need . . . and a responsibility.

Though there is a bright light on the horizon for the Victoria Gallery, a recent brief circulated to civic representatives points out that Victoria's per capita grant to the gallery remains the lowest in Canada.

Gaiety Within, Fear Outside

A Review Of 'Cabaret'

By WAYNE HARDING

The makers of Cabaret — both the musical play and the film — set high goals for themselves.

They wanted to create a musical comedy in the fine old tradition with songs, dancing and a charming love story. They also wanted it to be something of an historical drama with a dash of political comment and social understanding.

While they may have failed to reach all these objectives satisfactorily in the film version, their effort nonetheless has created a pleasant product.

Set in pre-Hitler Germany, the film story brings together all the bitterness and sweetness of the time: the new emancipation, the sophistication, the "divine decadence" — as the flapper played by Liza Minnelli puts it — in a background of political instability and the growth of fascism.

Fantasy and reality, beauty and ugliness live side by side in this world and at some points are undistinguishable. The virginal song of a youth in a country tavern garden becomes within moments a frightening Nazi anthem. In fine use of his medium, director Bob Fosses combines the tinsel and gaiety of a cheap night club with the viciousness and fear of the streets outside.

The cabaret is not a retreat from reality in such a world — it is a monitor of it. And the emcee of the show — played excellently and ominously by bone-faced, rubber-limbed Joel Grey — is the chorus (in the classical sense) of the tragedy which is occurring.

With so much to accomplish, it is understandable that the characters of the film play — the American showgirl, her British boy-friend just down from Cambridge, the German aristocrat, the Jewish debutante — have little substance. Stereotypes are the people of the cabaret.

Perhaps because her role as an empty-headed but ambitious singer caught in a world she does not much notice demands so little of Liza Minnelli, she is able to put so much more into her job belting out the lyrics of John Kander's music.

Michael York, as the innocent Briton who falls within her spell, and Helmut Greim, as the baron who seducees them both with little difficulty, have less demand put upon them.

One cannot leave such an ambitious project as Cabaret without looking for its broader significance. Are the naughty antics on the stage of the night club mocking only the smug Germans of the Weimar Republic? Is the violence in the streets of Berlin supposed to remind us of other violence in other streets?

Why does the trilingual emcee, who has welcomed us earlier in German, French and English, carefully leave out the English "goodbye"?

Rudolph Nureyev

Nureyev Tour Set

Rudolf Nureyev, premier dancer of the Royal Ballet, will appear with the National Ballet of Canada in a coast-to-coast tour next season.

The joint announcement was made by impresario Sol Hurok and National Ballet director Celia Franca.

Nureyev is to choreograph a new production of The Sleeping Beauty in which he will dance the leading role, and will perform in Swan Lake and La Sylphide.

The performance will premiere in Ottawa on Sept. 1 and will play in Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver.

Nureyev and the National Ballet will tour over a 20-week period, visiting cities all over the United States and concluding with a three-week engagement at the Metropolitan Opera House in April.

Music Party For Bursaries

A coffee party in aid of scholarship funds will be hosted Wednesday by the Royal College of Music Toronto Alumni, Victoria Chapter.

The event will take place at Maltwood Museum, Royal Oak, from 11 a.m. to 1:30 p.m.

Mass-Produced Prints Gaining Favor

By PENNY SEEBER

LONDON — Until quite recently people with taste simply did not decorate their walls with pictures of which there was more than one copy. It was considered "non-U." In the past few years, however, there has been an explosion of mass-produced art for the arty in the form of lithographs, etchings and, the most favoured, silk screen prints.

Lithographs and etchings are produced by the traditional stone and metal plate methods. Silk screen prints, on the other hand, are made by allowing paint to seep through silk on to paper, using a blocking agent on the silk to stop the color appearing on the parts of the paper that one wants to keep clear.

Most series consist of 75 to 100 prints, each print being given a number out of the total — say, 35-100. Sometimes, however, they run into thousands. The British and German newspapers, The Observer and Die Zeit, were recently offering their readers lithographs by such famous artists as Picasso, Braque and Dufy in series of 3,000 each.

There will obviously be a growing tendency to make larger series as the demand for prints increases. Ten years ago, an exhibition of prints at the British Institute of Contemporary Arts by a pioneer dealer in prints proved a resounding flop. Today, prints have become a major business with as many as 40 firms turning out prints in West Germany alone.

One reason for the boom is that there is altogether a greater interest in modern art in Western Europe — and, incidentally, Japan — than there used to be. One proof of this can be seen in the enormous improvement in the general standard of design which has taken place in recent years, while museums of modern art have become so popular that they are bursting at the seams.

To take just one example, the Tate Gallery, Britain's principal modern art museum, has twice the number of people visiting it annually as it did a decade ago. A visit to a special exhibition of contemporary work in London can mean standing in a queue for an hour or so just to get in.

The price of a "one-of" work of art, even by an artist who is young and comparatively unknown, is prohibitive for these new enthusiasts, all of whom now want to own a painting of their own but who have also come to scorn reproductions. The print industry has grown up partly to fulfil this need.

It has also developed to meet the needs of the artists themselves. For one thing, artists, again even those who are young and unknown, are becoming increasingly reluctant to part with their original paintings. Among other things, they want to be able to enjoy their best work themselves.

At the same time, there is now growing interest among artists in the techniques of "mass-produced" art. These are becoming more and more complex and many painters are becoming more interested in how to produce a certain effect through printing processes than in being responsible for making each individual brush stroke on their own oil painting. Some prints, for instance, need as many as 81 different operations before they are complete.

David Hockney is among the most notable of contemporary artists who recently appear to have almost abandoned traditional painting in favour of prints. His canvases have made him rich and famous, with an army of buyers waiting to snatch up any new painting with a Hockney signature. Yet last year, he only produced two individual paintings, devoting the rest of his time to prints. Other successful artists who appear to be deserting the canvas for prints are Kitaj and Allen Jones.

In recent years, there has been a growing tendency for people to buy paintings as an investment rather than for any love of art. Has the print explosion given the poorer art lover a lasting chance of triumphing over the investor?

Unfortunately, all the signs are that it has not. In 1963 Richard Hamilton, a well-known pop artist who recently had an entire exhibition devoted to him at the Tate, was selling a print, improbably entitled "Adonis Y-front," for only $10 a copy. Today the print fetches between $2,500 and $4,000. It seems that, unless mass-production becomes even more massive, the uneven duel between the investor and the ordinary art lover is beginning all over again.

Musical Arts Meets

Annual meeting of the Victoria Musical Arts Society will take place at Craigdarroch Castle, Wednesday at 8 p.m.

An interesting musical program will follow the brief meeting and tea will be served.

SOUND SCENE

Joy of Ireland Not All Gone

Happy music may not be what we think of first in relation to Ireland these days, but the Irish Rovers will be at the McPherson Sunday night to spread a little old-fashioned Irish joy and good humor.

Jimmy Ferguson took a few minutes out from the Rovers' CBC-TV rehearsals in Vancouver this week to discuss the trouble in the "ould sod." "They're reaping what they've been sowing for 800 years," said he. "Parents have been teaching their kids to hate for generations."

Has it made any difference to the songs the Rovers sing? "We've dropped one or two what might possibly be considered inflammatory songs, but we still sing the Orange and the Green! We have lost one or two guests who didn't want to get involved in Irish troubles, though."

Will Millar, the talented leader of the group, maintained his home in Ireland until recently, and commuted to Canada for engagements. However he recently sold his property there, and is now resident full-time in Vancouver where the group's very successful TV show is taped. It has consistently rated amongst the top five CBC shows, and has been renewed for next season.

"We're negotiating for the series to run in the U.S., Australia and New Zealand," explained Ferguson. But not the U.K. . . . not at this time!"

Eight years ago the yet-to-be Rovers emigrated to Canada where they joined forces and started performing in coffee houses and small clubs. Will Millar had a successful children's TV show in Calgary as well. On New Year's Eve 1965 they opened at the Purple Onion in San Francisco; at just about the same time "The Unicorn" was released, and since then they've never looked back.

The 6 p.m. show Sunday is sold out, but good seats are still available for the 9 p.m. show. See you there!

Termites Turn Tables on Researcher

HONOLULU (UPI) — A scientist aiming for a new non-polluting method of destroying termites found the biggest surprise was on him.

The insects recognized which of their colleagues were infected, clipped off their antennas and legs, built a wall to seal them off from the rest of the colony and left the contagious members to die.

But Dr. Minoru Tamashiro, director of a Navy-funded research project to find a non-pollutant that will control termites, is hopeful he'll outwit the destructive insect yet.

Tamashiro, an associate professor of entomology at the University of Hawaii, said he was growing "nematodes," a parasitic worm no bigger than a pencil dot, in the laboratory. Termites trapped outside and brought into the lab were infected by the nematodes, then turned loose to carry the disease back into their colonies to cause an epizootic — and insect epidemic.

"I don't know how they did it," Tasmashiro said, "but the termites recognized the sick insects, isolated them and kept the disease from spreading to the rest of the colony.

"This really surprised me," Tamashiro said, "because to my knowledge this kind of behavior has not been detected before. Although termites are know to seal off poisoned areas, such as a tunnel leading to a home that's been exterminated, they were not know to single out indivudual members."

What was particularly baffling to Tamashiro was that the termites recognized the infected insects "in some cases, before the symptoms became obvious.

"Although relatively high numbers — around 50,000 — of infected termites are introduced into a colony, this number has not been high enough to initiate an epizootic," Tamashiro said.

The scientist of Japanese ancestry doesn't believe the drastic type of quarantine springs from intelligence but from some kind of natural defence reaction that perhaps warns the termites of ususual behavior in a sick insect.

Tamashiro said that one of the biggest problems in curbing termites is their continual population explosion, with the queen laying up to 5,000 eggs a day and living up to 20 years.

"The queen is a perpetual egg-laying machine," Tamashiro said. "This is her only function. There are vast numbers of termites in each colony, and the colonies are not easy to find."

Despite the obstacles, Tamashiro is hopeful he and his researchers will find and ingenios method of extermination, one that curbs the termite problem but causes no adverse effect to other life forms.

A Symbol of Their Agony

VANCOUVER (CP) — The cross in Central City Mission's new skid road chapel is made from broken, jagged bottles.

"The cross is not just a religious symbol," says Canon George Stegen, the chaplain. "For many it is a symbol of their own special agony and cross—alcoholism."

Central City, which has served thousands of down-and-outers and derelicts since it began as a street mission in 1908, now is a treatment centre for 140 residents. Thirty are in the alcoholism unit.

The white side-panels of the 22-by-30-foot chapel are bare, but later will have wrought iron designs symbolic of the people who come to the mission and of the people who serve it.

The wall on which the cross hangs is of stained cedar, set in diagonal strips, and the simple altar is also of cedar.

The chapel, designed by architect Johnothan Yardley, is the first formal chapel the mission has had.

Thompson — McIntyre

The marriage of Marcia Ann McIntyre and Dennis B. Thompson took place April 1 in Courtenay at Canadian Martyrs Church. Reverend John W. Tunner officiated at the ceremony. Mrs. M. S. Witzel was organist and accompanied Gerard W. Oteman when he sang "Ave Maria" during the marriage service. The bride is the second daughter of Gordon McIntyre of Courtenay and the late Mrs. McIntyre, and the groom, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Bert Thompson of Victoria.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, was beautiful in her model lace wedding dress designed with high collar and puffed, slim-cuffed long sleeves. The slightly fitted Princess bodice and the A-line skirt were accented by a row of small white buttons down the front from neckline to the widely ruffled hem. A Cathedral train of matching lace fell from the high back waistline into graceful folds. Four tiers of scalloped nylon sheer formed her bridal veil, caught to the head by a bandeau of white flowers and leaves. The bride carried a formal bouquet of yellow roses. Mrs. Roger Reid, the former LaVerne McIntyre of Courtenay, sister of the bride, was matron of honor. Miss Alice Wrinch, Victoria, was bridesmaid. The attendants wore similar full-length dresses of blue floral tops edged with nylon ruffles down the front, at the high neck and around the cuffs of the long, full sleeves and long gathered skirts of blue organza. They wore flowers in their hair, and carried Colonial bouquets of white chrysanthemums.

A basket of blue carnations and white spray chrysanthemums stood on the main altar during the afternoon ceremony. Standards of white gladioli and yellow spray 'mums added a springtime atmosphere to the wedding. Silver dollies with dainty white bells and blue ribbon ties marked the family pews.

Brian Hart of Victoria was best man. Gordon Phillips, Victoria, and Leo McIntyre, brother of the bride, were ushers.

The reception followed at Comox Golf Club with the bride and groom and their attendants receiving guests standing in front of the fireplace, gay with flowers for the wedding luncheon. The head table was set with silver candelabra and silver goblets.

The bride and groom passed wedding cake to the 60 guests present at the reception. The three-tiered yellow and white cake was topped by a gold cross which was also used at the wedding of Mr. and Mrs. Roger Reid, who were celebrating their fifth anniversary April 1. Blue Macado table china gave added color to the table setting. Brian Hart was master of ceremonies. He called on M. S. Witzel to propose the traditional toast to the bride.

JOHNSTONE—The gratitude in our hearts can never be fully expressed, but we want our friends, relatives, and neighbours to know how much their kind words and expressions of sympathy have meant to us during our recent time of sorrow in the sad loss of my dear wife, mother and grandmother Edith V. P. Johnstone. — Husband John Johnstone, son James Johnstone and Family, daughter Arlene Hansen and family.

We would like to express out sincere thanks for the many cards of sympathy and kind words and condolences shown to us in the recent death of our father, the late August Jack.

9 IN MEMORIAM

TURNBULL — In loving memory of William H. Turnbull who passed into the presence of his Lord May 6, 1966.
Gone is the face we loved so dear,
Silent is the voice we loved to hear;
Too far away for sight or speech,
But not too far for thought to reach,
Sweet to remember him who once was here,
And who, though absent, is just as dear.
—Ever remembered by his loving wife and family.

New Doctor Fee Schedule Agreement Seen Closer

The provincial government and British Columbia's 3,300 doctors appear to have reached agreement on fee increases after 16 months of bargaining.

While doctors have still to approve the changes in a referendum, directors of the B.C. Medical Association meeting in Vancouver Friday voted 28-4 to accept a government proposal which would see doctors guaranteed a minimum 6½ per cent increase in average earnings from medicare.

The government agreed to accept a new doctors' fee schedule, effective May 1. As with the old schedule, doctors will be paid 90 per cent of fees for services insured under medicare.

There is no ceiling on how much doctors can earn and they have the right to adjust their fee schedule, provided they match any fee increases with corresponding decreases elsewhere to keep medicare costs within an allotted budget.

The proposed revisions cover the next year, to April 1. Details of the proposal go to the profession Monday in a mail ballot, to be returned before the annual meeting of the BCMA which opens in Penticton May 24.

Directors said after Friday's meeting that details of the proposal would normally not be made public before they were given to the profession "but the pressure of public interest makes it advisable for this release at this time."

The board of the BCMA will recommend doctors accept the government offer.

Based on medicare payments of almost $128,000,000 in the year ending March 31 to 2,700 active doctors, their average gross income was $47,310.

With allowances for increases in population (8.7 per cent), number of doctors (to 2,900), fee adjustments and utilization, it's estimated the average payment by medicare to doctors in the next fiscal year will be $49,764 gross, an increase of 5.19 per cent.

If this proves to be the case, the government has undertaken to make up the difference to a minimum 6.5 per cent increase. But in practice, an increase in a fee for a service has generally produced greater utilization so that B.C.'s doctors over the next year may well increase earnings past the minimum 6½ per cent through their own efforts.

Big Choice Of Jobs In Medical Arena

In this, the first of five articles on women and careers, Ann Dunsmuir looks at medicine. On Monday, women and teaching will be featured.

Veterinarian needs strength, stamina.

Young women planning a career in health services tend to zero in on nursing or medicine and ignore the great variety of opportunities in this field.

Students who want to help the sick but hate the sight of blood might be wise to choose careers in physio and occupational therapy or dental hygiene.

Those determined to enter nursing but vague about details may not be aware that they can train at a university, technical institute or hospital school of nursing.

There is a considerable difference in both time and expenses involved in the choice.

University training, leading to a degree of Bachelor of Science in Nursing, is the most expensive choice and involves a four-year training period. The University of British Columbia requires Grade 13 or one year of university for admission to the course.

The British Columbia Institute of Technology requires high school graduation and grants a diploma in nursing after only two years. Most hospital schools of nursing supply free tuition, uniforms and equipment. Their courses are usually three years in length and high school graduation is required for admission.

Wide Variety

All graduates must write the professional nursing examination to obtain a Registered Nurse's Certificate.

Nurses can work in a wide variety of fields as well as in hospitals. They can choose careers in public health, nursing education, administration, industry, private duty or government service.

If they want to work in hospitals they can choose specialities such as psychiatric, pediatric or surgical nursing. Or, they can work in intensive care, cardiac arrest or renal dialysis units.

Students interested in medicine may apply to any one of Canada's 14 medical schools. Approximately seven years of hard work is necessary to obtain a degree. This includes pre-medical, medical and internship studies.

The past practice of providing two years pre-medical training is rapidly being replaced at medical schools. Most now require three years of study in the Faculty of Arts and Science for admission to the four-year course in medicine. Graduates can choose from a wide range of opportunities. A doctor can enter general practice, qualify as a specialist, teach, concentrate on research or choose government service or medical administration.

The qualifications necessary for dentistry are comparable to those needed for medicine and career opportunities are equally good.

Preventive Stress

Dental Hygiene offers students a satisfying career in the field of dentistry. The stress is on preventive dentistry. Hygienists take X-rays and impressions, clean teeth, polish fillings and give fluoride treatments. Most important of all, they instruct patients in oral hygiene — something busy dentists often neglect. Most graduates will work for more than one dentist.

Five Canadian universities offer a two-year diploma course in dental hygiene. High school graduation and one year of university are required to enter the course. There is an insufficient supply of dental hygienists in Canada and the demand for their services is high. Salaries vary but some earn up to $900 a month shortly after graduation.

Veteinarians diagnose diseases in animals and prescribe medical or surgical treatments. Traditionally they work as private practitioners treating farm livestock in rural communities, but many confine their practice to small animals in urban areas.

Graduates can choose government service as regulatory, inspection, or research officers. The health of Animals Branch of the federal department of agriculture employs more than 500 veterinarians.

Inspection and regulatory officers concentrate on meat inspection and the control and eradication of contagious diseases. Public Health agencies employ veterinarians in food control programs to lessen the possibilities of contaminated food reaching the consumer. Industry needs veterinarians for biological products research, in sales promotion and the field of animal nutrition.

Courses Offered

Three colleges in Canada offer four-year courses in veterinary medicine: L'Ecole de medecine Veterinaire, St. Hyacinthe, Que.; the Ontario Veterinary College, University of Guelph, Guelph, Ont.; and the College of Veterinary Medicine, University of Saskatchewan, Saskatoon.

Admission requirements are two years of university educa-

Abortion Rate Highest in B.C.

OTTAWA (CP) — Almost three times as many therapeutic abortions were performed in Canadian hospitals in 1971 as in 1970, Statistics Canada reported this week.

The number of abortions increased to 30,949 in 1971 from 11,152 the previous year. The abortion rate — expressed as the number of abortions for every 100 live births — increased to 8.3 from 3.

The rate was highest in British Columbia, where 7,045 abortions represented a rate of 19.1. The 80 abortions performed during the year in Newfoundland hospitals represented the lowest provincial rate of 0.6.

Statistics Canada included in its report comparative United States figures which show that the abortion rate in the 10 provinces is relatively lower than that in 16 selected states.

The Canadian rate was also below that of 11 abortions for every 100 live births in England and Wales in 1970 — latest year for which figures are available.

The report added that in Canada in 1970, 14 women died as a result of abortion — five of them as a result of criminal or self-induced abortions — compared with 75 deaths resulting from complications in pregnancy and childbirth.

By province, the number of abortions and the abortion rate in 1971 were: Newfoundland—80 abortions for a rate of 0.6; Prince Edward Island—39 for a rate of 2; Nova Scotia—645 for a rate of 4.5; New Brunswick—146 for a rate of 1.3; Quebec—1,903 for a rate of 2; Ontario—16,244 for a rate of 12; Manitoba—864 for a rate of 4.5; Saskatchewan—760 for a rate of 4.6;

Alberta—3,169 for a rate of 9.7; British Columbia—7,090 for a rate of 19.1; Yukon—nine for a rate of 1.8.

The was no report for the Northwest Territories.

Doing The Town

With DOROTHY FRASER

Birthday sales with a difference . . .

This is another milestone birthday year for Wilson's . . . their 110th in fact . . . but being becomingly modest, they're not making any hoopla about it . . . No super-colossal sales, no razzle-dazzle (after all, who needs hoopla when you're as hale and hearty as Wilson's at 110?) . . . What's happening though, is this: Wilson's plan to hold a series of "small" sales featuring particular items in the same category . . . whose price tags have been slashed to a point that we can only suppose this birthday business is going to somebody's head! . . . The first of these sales starts on Monday, and will consist mainly of dresses . . . All sorts of dresses, culled from Wilson's regular spring and summer stock . . . There'll be one-piece dresses . . . jacket dresses . . . cool crisp cottons . . . easy-care crimplenes and silky polyesters . . . in an assortment of sizes . . . leaning perhaps rather heavily on size 12's . . . Naturally early-bird shoppers are going to have the best choice . . . so hurry in to Wilson's just as soon as you can . . . You'll find all these sale items together in a special section . . . and we'd say the odds are excellent on your carrying away something to gloat over . . . and make you want to wish Wilson's many happy returns of the day! . . . W & J Wilson Limited, 1221 Government St., 383-7177.

Have you visited The Lighthouse yet? . . . We finally got around to doing so last Wednesday . . . and were completely delighted with everything about this chic, exciting store . . . situated in the Counting House right next to the Medieval Inn . . . (Don't let the sight of those stairs throw you . . . there's an elevator to whisk you up and down in seconds!) . . . The Lighthouse is basically a lamp store, devoted to modern lamps of great originality . . . but it also sells a great many other things . . . like exclusive Scandinavian washable and color-fast draperies . . . in an array of beautiful colors and designs . . . and numerous other items for the home and for gifts . . . The Linds . . . the charming couple who own and staff The Lighthouse . . . place great stress on quality and uniqueness in the things they sell . . . all of which are contemporary in style and feeling . . . Certainly we saw a lot of things we considered downright exciting and extremely useful . . . for instance, there are silver files for fitting into the drawers where you keep your silverware . . . Felt slots in strips of various sizes which you buy individually and combine to line any drawer so it's just like a regular silver chest . . . And here's a novel gift for host or hostess . . . a "neck glass" to hang around your neck so your hands will be free at parties . . . Great! . . . The Lighthouse, 1005 Broad St., 383-6633.

You can now have your hair done on the "Settebello" . . . the supertrain running between Milan and Rome.

Sparkling springtime fashions . . .

Are you a "planner" . . . who's got her spring and summer wardrobe all mapped out . . . or a "dreamer" who wants to be shown what's what? . . . Either way you've got it made when you shop at Miss Frith's . . . because with their huge collection of lovely new clothes . . . and more arriving daily . . . we can't conceive of your not finding your heart's desire! . . . And it makes no difference whether your clothing budget is generous . . . or hewed pretty close to the line . . . there are smart things in every price bracket . . . for instance, this week we saw some really terrific suits . . . imported from England . . . and priced as low as $75 . . . which we consider pretty unbelievable in this day and age . . . certainly for such good quality, styling and tailoring! . . . They come from several different British makers, are in about a dozen different styles . . . tweeds, wool plaids, worsteds . . . A smart double breasted grey worsted with stitched detailing is tagged at only $109 . . . Another navy and white birdseye tweed with pleated skirt is the same price . . . The most expensive of the lot is a modest $129 . . . If you'd like a new suit, we suggest you go have a look at these . . . they're really nice, and excellent value! . . . Miss Frith Fashions, 1619 Douglas St., 383-7181.

By the time the average child in the U.S. finishes high school he has been exposed to 11,000 hours of school and 14,000 hours of TV!

Long, lithe and lovely . . .

One thing that's puzzled us of late . . . what does one wear over an informal long dress in order to look properly put together? . . . Well, we found the answer this week in Eaton's Townhouse . . . Floor-length tailored coats . . . which not only look right, but give the wearer that much-to-be-desired long, slender line from neck to ankles . . . One of these coats . . . a size 14 . . . is particularly good on a mature figure . . . It's a lightweight navy worsted, single breasted, with big silver buttons . . . A very light-hearted coat, in geranium red worsted, has welt seam detailing . . . a long row of buttons marching down the front . . . This one's a honey . . . as is the navy and white polka dot floor-length trench coat . . . which can also double as a raincoat . . . (we saw numerous coats of this kind on the streets of Madrid and Lisbon during our recent European jaunt) . . . This latter coat is priced at a mere $50 . . . Definitely a coat for the younger figure . . . For taking on a cruise and to wear over a summer evening dress . . . we saw a full, transparent evening coat of stiffened nylon plisse . . . with rows of frills around the sleeves, and edging the hood . . . Striking in either black or white . . . and both so ethereal and dreamy we wouldn't know which one to choose! . . . Eaton's Townhouse, 382-7141, local 367.

Give the hanging rod in your closet a coat of paste wax . . . makes hangers slide more easily so there's less trouble finding that suit or dress!

Fragrant Gifts for Mother's Day . . .

Whether she's a young wife with a brand new baby . . . a grandmother many times over . . . or a great-grandmother . . . every mother in the land would be thrilled with a gift of perfume on her Day . . . It's a subtle compliment that tells a woman she's attractive . . . admired . . . loved! . . . And the best place we know to choose your fragrant gift is at Douglas Pharmacy . . . who have the largest and best selection of perfumes in Victoria . . . To celebrate their 15th year in business, their recent move to the larger store, and Mother's Day all in one . . . next Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday . . . for these three days only . . . they'll be selling all their imported perfumes, cosmetics and toiletries at a 15% discount . . . And this discount will also apply to the once-a-year specials of which we noticed a goodly number . . . Douglas must have hundreds of fragrances . . . by all the great name parfumeurs . . . tion for entry to Guelph or Saskatchewan and one year for L'Ecole de Medecine Veterinaire. Brochures issued by veterinary colleges stress the need for good health, stamina and manual dexterity. Treating a sick bull, for example, requires strength as well as skill. Most women will probably want to specialize in the treatment of small animals.

Master's Degree

The Universities of McGill, Toronto and Montreal offer courses of study leading to either a Master's Degree or a Diploma in Audiology and Speech Therapy. The University of UBC offers a graduate course in Audiology and Speech Sciences. At McGill and Toronto a bachelor of arts degree is required to enrol in the two year programs.

The University of Montreal requires either a Bachelor of Arts degree or completion of a two year community college course in biological sciences.

Audiologists study and evaluate loss of hearing and recommend methods of remedying the impairment such as lip reading and auditory training. Speech therapists evaluate and re-educate people suffering from disorders which affect comprehension and expression of both oral and written language.

These communication disorders may be caused by mental retardation or be of an emotional, functional or physical nature.

Graduates work in hospitals, rehabilitation centres, clinics, special schools for the handicapped and the regular school system. Many are employed by municipal and provincial governments.

Courses in Occupational Therapy are offered at eight Canadian universities. Four-year degree programs are available at the universities of McGill, Queen's, Alberta and Manitoba. Manitoba and Queen's also offer a three year diploma course.

Combined Course

The University of Toronto offers a three year diploma course. The Universities of British Columbia, Montreal and Laval have three year programs leading to a degree. The programs at Toronto and UBC are combined courses of physio and occupational therapy.

Occupational Therapy is medically directed treatment which uses the normal components of work, daily activities and recreation to restore physical or mental functions and rehabilitate patients.

Graduates work in hospitals, schools, rehabilitation centres, community programs, alcohol and drug addiction centres, teaching and research.

Remedial Work

Eleven universities offer degrees in physiotherapy. Students study physiology, psychology, clinical medicine, physics, chemistry, anatomy and the practical techniques of physiotherapy.

Physiotherapists work to maintain and restore physical functions ina patient through the use of various modalities (methods). They use heat, light, electricity, water and mechanical agents, including massage and remedial exercise in the treatment of the injured and disabled.

The British Columbia Institute of Technology offers a diploma course in Biomedical Electronics Technology. This two-year course has been established to meet the growing demand for skilled technologists caused by the use of medical electronic apparatus to measure blood flow, pulse rate, respiration, nerve activity, and other bodily functions.

Graduates work in close association with medical engineers and physicians engaged in operating, maintaining and designing scientific medical equipment. Students taking the Electroneurophysiology Option is second year work in the area of biomedical electronics concerned with investigation of the nervous system.

The BCIT board of admissions accepts applicants in all courses who have graduated on the Academic-Technical Program in any one of the three technical specialities and the Arts (Humanities) Specialty.

Students who take the course in Environmental Technology are trained to work as public health inspectors. Successful students will receive a diploma of technology. To become a public health inspector a candidate must complete three months of field work in a recognized health unit, meet the requirements of the board of Certification, Canadian Public Health Association, and write the national examinations for his certificate.

Other health division courses at BCIT are Health Data Technology, Medical Laboratory Technology, Medical Radiography Technology, and Nuclear Medicine Technology.

Camosun College, Victoria, also offers a course in Medical Laboratory Technology. Students should consult their high school counsellors and registrars at junior colleges for information on courses. These may change from year to year depending on student interest and the employment situation.

Day Care Need Not Met: Study

OTTAWA (CP) — Canada's day-care facilities don't even begin to meet the need, a national study on day care by the Canadian Council on Social Development said this week.

All children, not just those of working mothers, can benefit from day-care programs, the 133-page report said. But few programs are available, especially outside of the major urban areas, and standards now vary widely.

"Good quality day care should be construed as a family-oriented service providing not only care and protection for children, but also an essential educative and developmental function."

The report said a range of services should be offered, all appropriately staffed for different age groups and situations. These would include full-day and half-day programs, family day care and group pre-school programs, and programs for children with special needs.

"Day-care service should be available to all those who need it or want to use it, whatever their circumstances," the report recommended.

The responsibility for meeting this objective should remain with the province, the report said. It also recommended joint boards or inter-departmental committees be set up to assure communication in planning for the day-care services.

"First priority should be given to establishing day-care services for children under two years of age, for those children whose parents are out of the home and for children who have been diagnosed as requiring special care," the report said.

It also recommended further study on training programs and staff qualifications, on use of volunteers, on financing and effective community action in promoting day-care services.

Much of the report includes information collected in two surveys during 1968 and 1969.

Many of the statistics therefore are dated, but Reuben Baetz, executive director of the council, said in an interview that the report is "a necessary reminder of the inadequacies of day-care in Canada."

He said the council is convinced that most of the findings still are applicable.

The report comments on deficiencies in physical facilities and equipment in some centres and suggested that many centres offer unimaginative and sterile environments for education and social development of young children.

Rock, Jets Biggest Din

HAMILTON (CP) — Rock bands and airplanes are the two most serious sources of noise pollution facing Canadians today, says an acoustics expert from the University of Montreal.

Dr. Leslie Doelle told a conference on pollution that over-exposure of noise to people in rock bands or at discotheques a couple of times a week can lead to permanent hearing damage.

"In many cases the ear damage is only temporary but it can be permanent."

As for airplanes, Dr. Doelle says airplane manufacturers have done just about all they can to cut down the noise of engines and it now is up to government to isolate airports from built-up areas.

"If airports are built with 10 times as much land as is needed, then the people will have perfect protection from the noise."

Local Food Bill Survey Shows Yearly Price Rise

The monthly cost of feeding an average Victoria man rose by $2.69 between February 1971 and February 1972, a provincial government survey shows.

It cost $37.04 to feed an adult man here in February of this year, up from $34.35 a month last year. The monthly food bill for the average woman rose by $2.25 during the same period, from $28.89 to $31.14.

The survey records the monthly food costs of a low-budget but nutritious diet for a man, woman, and children of different ages. It is done three times a year — in February, August and November, for the provincial health department.

Feeding a boy between the ages of 16 and 20 turns out to be most expensive, the survey indicates. Monthly food bill in February 1972 was $41.24, up $2.94 from the year before. Cost for girls of the same age was $33.07, up $2.51 from February 1971.

In only four months, November 1971 to February 1972, the cost of feeding an adult man rose by $1.28; cost for a woman rose by $1.13.

The survey determines the average price of certain basic food items in Victoria stores. This average price is then multiplied by the amount of each product required by a person for a month's time. The total of all products indicates the minimum one person must spend on food per month.

Victoria Only

This survey is done only in Victoria, and is the only food price survey that the health department conducts, said Pat Wolczuk, nutritionist in the department.

A survey comparing food prices in different Victoria stores on a regular basis would be useful for the consumer, said Miss Wolczuk. However, she — the only nutritionist employed by the B.C. government — has neither the time nor facilities to conduct one.

In Hawaii, the state department of agriculture does a weekly survey of food prices and publishes them in a local newspaper, the Honolulu Advertiser.

Eighty-five food items in 25 stores are checked, but only 40 items in 11 stores are published in the paper.

Such a survey enables consumers to compare food prices between different stores on specific items, and see price changes from week to week. But the department cautions shoppers, saying quality, selection, convenience, as well as price, should determine shopping decisions.

If such a food price survey were done in the Victoria area, "this is where it would normally fail," said M. M. Gilchrist, markets commissioner in the department of agriculture's markets and statistics branch.

However, the markets and statistics branch simply doesn't have the staff to do such a survey, he added. The branch hasn't had a statistician for the past 14 years, the only province in Canada without an agricultural statistician. Gilchrist relies on federal statistics.

The federal government does surveys of food and other consumer prices across the country. However, Statistics Canada does not publish food price figures for each city, but combines them in monthly provincial statistics.

Must Be Rigid

Mrs. Elsie Garfat has been doing consumer price surveys for Statistics Canada for four years in the Victoria area. Every month she checks the price of 200 food items in 16 stores, ranging from supermarket to corner grocery.

"I have very rigid specifications that I go by," said Mrs. Garfat. Weight, size and quality of each item must be considered when comparing prices, she said.

For example, one brand of bleach has recently increased its chlorine content, she said. That is, in effect, a lowering of its price.

New items have been added to her list as they become essential to shoppers, such as dog food, garbage bags and plastic wrap, said Mrs. Garfat. Her monthly checks include prices of gasoline and oil for cars, doctors' and dentists' bills, and beauty shops.

"Prices are kept completely confidential," she said. Prices in different stores are not compared, but combined to get an average cost to the consumer.

The Victoria branch of the Consumers Association of Canada does not do a regular comparative food price survey.

"We can't see that it's going to serve any purpose," said Mrs. John Mace, chairman of the association's research and grievance committee.

It just doesn't pay for people to run around to different stores to buy items where they're cheaper, said Mrs. Mace. Many people would prefer to shop in a store that is close and convenient, rather than go miles to a lower-priced store, she said.

Keep a Kitty

Food price surveys don't take weekly "specials" into consideration, she added.

"What I tell young people . . . is to try and have a few dollars ahead in the kitty" to take advantage of specials, she said.

"We try to steer people away from convenience foods like instant rice and TV dinners," Mrs. Mace said, because of the high prices. "I find cake mix is the only mix that is reasonable," and only cake mixes in paper pouches, not in cardboard packages, she emphasized.

ADVERTISING AS YOU SHOP

TORONTO (CP) — Shoppers in 70 supermarkets across the country are being confronted with indoor screens that show them familiar products while a loudspeaker proclaims their virtues.

The idea is the brainchild of Intel Systems Ltd. of Toronto and its executive vice-president, Murray Gould, thinks the steady growth of this form of advertising is an encouraging sign.

"We feel the ads serve as reminders for the busy shopper and they help her in the shopping trip," he said.

The company's future plans include the installation of small television sets in bars and restaurants on which products will be advertised to patrons. No sound is planned for these advertisements.

No 'Lib' in Mother's Day Cards

By GAY PAULEY
Special to the Times

NEW YORK — Humor mingles with sentiment in the 1972 crop of Mother's Day cards. But in this area, women's lib has its slip showing.

About the nearest expression of the effect of women's liberation campaigns I could find in the current flood of cards hitting the shops was this one. On the card's face, there's a caricature of a male making a speech to the effect, "Think of motherhood as a job." Inside, it added, ". . . and quit: Happy day."

Irving Cohen, an executive with the huge chain of Fifth Avenue card shops, said, "Mother's Day remains strongly traditional. We don't see any liberationist messages making the rounds." These shops handle cards from dozens of manufacturers so should be a fairly accurate gauge of trends.

Hallmark said the cards to honor mothers this May 14 were less saccharine than in previous years but still express the sentiments of kindness and devotion. They use the language of the young today.

One, for instance, on its face pays tribute to mother's devotion to her family then inside finishes off, "you're a real swinger." A badge with the "real swinger" message is detachable.

Mory Weiss, board member of the National Association of Greeting Card Publishers, figured if you look hard enough through collections of some 200 manufacturers you could find a few lib messages. But his firm, American Greetings Corp., one of the largest, has none this year.

Wait though, as they say in baseball, until next year. Weiss, in an interview, said cards eventually pick up the assorted moods of the nation and he expected equal rights campaigns and the steady increase in the under-25 population to show.

Mothers, also getting younger and no longer fitting the rocking chair stereotype, enjoy the modern messages, he said.

"We used to do a lot of poetry cards," Weiss said, "sometimes eight lines of verse reciting all the problems the children had created for mom and thanking her for her love and understanding through the years."

The "mother is another word for love" sentiment remains a best seller but some humor is being injected.

He mentioned one card whose face reads, "It's Mother's Day and I want you to know yo're the dearest, sweetest, kindest mother in the world." Inside, it finishes, "I'd have more to say — but right now I have to go to the bathroom."

Son Going to Pot?

DEAR ABBY: This memo came to our office a few days ago. You would be doing a tremendous public service to publish this in your column, Abby. — P. L. Scarsella.

DEAR MR. SCARSELLA: Approxdmately a year ago I published a similar item, but it's worth repeating:

DON'T DO IT, SON

"So you were stopped for a traffic violation and were discovered in possession of pot. And you were convicted of possession — a felony — and received a suspended sentence. Do you think that is the end of it, son?

"NOT QUITE! You also lost your right to vote, to own a gun or to run for public office. You lost the opportunity of EVER becoming a doctor, dentist, certified public accountant, engineer, lawyer, architect, realtor, osteopath, pharmacist, schoolteacher, barber, or a stockbroker. You can't EVER hold a job where you must be licensed or bonded and you can NEVER work for the city, the county, or the Federal government. You can't be admitted to West Point, Annapolis, or the Air Force Academy; but you CAN enlist in the military service . . . and be assigned to a labor battalion.

"Son, take it from some guys with a lot of mileage behind them: To you — with a lot of mileage still ahead of you — it just isn't worth it! DON'T DO IT!"

DEAR ABBY: I recently divorced my husband of many years after he was arrested for molesting our young adopted daughter on several occasions. He has done other things over the years, but this was the last straw.

He is now planning to marry a young woman who has three young daughters. Should I tell her why I divorced him so she will be forewarned? Or should I mind my own business? I hate to have him ruin another little girl's life.

Please answer in your column. Perhaps others would also know what to do in a situation like this — First Wife

DEAR FIRST: Do unto others as you would have them do unto you. (If you were she, wouldn't you appreciate the warning?)

NUN HELPS CONVICTS

MARSHALL, Mich. (AP) — "What's a nice girl like you doing in a place like this?"

Sister Mary Kayatin, a Roman Catholic nun, hears that old line a great deal. She is a teacher and spends three nights a week instructing prisoners at the Calhoun County jail.

Sister Mary teaches under a program designed to help convicts complete their high school education. They study for the general education development test, a high school equivalency examination, and if they pass are given a diploma.

Sister Mary, who has 25 years of teaching experience, was not hesitant about teaching in a jail. During the day she teaches adult education in the Battle Creek school system.

"I've learned to accept people as they are," she said.

Popular Science Celebrates a Century

NEW YORK (NYT) — Light a 100-candlepower cake for Popular Science.

The monthly, which began when Ulysses S. Grant was president, is turning 100, reporting wonders of science and marvels of craftsmanship for the glue-it-yourself set.

In the first issue, Herbert Spencer wrote about "The Study of Sociology—Our Need of It." Lesser-known optimists described the causes of dyspepsia, links between science and immortality, and even marvels of prehistoric times.

Popular Science has long since turned its back on prehistory, sociology and the inner man. It now calls itself "the what's new magazine," and prints the latest tips on home improvement, tools, boating, autos and electronics.

This is the magazine that reports the latest dreams: a 1900 horseless carriage by Renault; Edison's 1877 talking machine; an 1879 cathode ray tube; a Paris newspaper printed by solar energy.

The sun never sets on Popular Science without a brisk analysis — "The Recent Eclipse of the Sun" was in the first issue and "Can We Harness Nuclear Fusion in the '70s?" by Dr. Edward Teller, as in the current one.

Also in this issue there are articles by other great figures of contemporary and future science; Peter Goldmark writes about how "Communications Will Soon Change the Way You Live, Work and Play," Barry Commoner describes "A Healthy Environment," and R. Buckminster Fuller explains his Hexa-pent Dome.

The magazine regularly features inventions destined to revolutionize natural laws and order: disposable handcuffs, an automatic guitar tuner, a self-righting boat, a speedometer that talks.

Popular Science still keeps a crystal ball, although with mixed results. The magazine hailed the future of Edison's phonograph, but gave his incandescent electric lamp a single paragraph in the back of the book. In 1920 it ran an article predicting a great future for atomic energy, but five years earlier it hailed the automobile as a boon to health since it would eliminate stable flies.

Editor-in-chief Hubert P. Luckett likes to think that the competition between Popular Science and Popular Mechanics is a thing of the past — with his own magazine turning to higher income interests and the competition keeping its nose to the grindstone.

The two magazines are neck-and-neck in the circulation race — 1,625,000 guaranteed circulation for Popular Science, 1,650,000 for Popular Mechanics. Popular Science sold for 50 cents in 1872, and costs only 10 cents more than that today—an achievement no less astonishing than an eclipse of the sun or harnessing of the atom.

Religious Strife Teen Life-Style

BELFAST (UPI) — In another city, Bill Iverone and Mick Geoghan probably would be friends. Here, they are sworn enemies, hating each other without having met.

Both are members of tartan gangs — roving bands of teenagers who have spearheaded sectarian violence in the city.

Bill, 16, a Protestant, belongs to the Shankhill tartans. Mick, a Roman Catholic of the same age, is a member of the Shamrock tartans.

Their aim in life is to kill each other.

"There are no good Roman Catholics," said Bill. "No matter what you say, they're bitter deep down."

"All Protestants are bigots," said Mick, "They're born that way. They have sneaky eyes."

Why do you fight?

"You fight because you have to beat down the Taigs, a derisive term for Roman Catholics from the Irish word meaning 'outlaw.')" he said.

"If you didn't fight the Taigs, there wouldn't be much else to do."

Mick looked surprised at the question. "We fight the Prods because that's what we have to do," he said.

Then, he grinned. "Sometimes we get wee lads, Catholics you know, put orange badges on them and send them off to the Prods saying we beat them.

"Then we lie in wait for the Shankhill tartans — and wham."

What happens if a Protestant girl meets a Roman Catholic boy and falls in love?

"We warn her off," said Bill. "If she doesn't stop, she gets beaten."

"We're not bigots," said Mick. "If a Prod says he'll turn, we don't mind. If he won't, we warn the girl to stop seeing him. If she doesn't she gets a head shave."

"When we fight," said Bill, "we fight fair, with our fists and boots. The Taigs use knives and hatchets."

"The Prods are dirty fighters," said Mick. "They use swordsticks, knives and bicycle chains. We only use our fists and feet."

Is it because their religion is different?

Is Your Breath What It Used To Be?

Bad breath has a number of causes. Age is a factor—so are dentures, caps, bridgework, gum trouble and so on. But Steri/sol Oral Antiseptic does much to control "aging breath" problems. You see, Steri/sol is the only mouthwash with Hexetidine—the powerful germ killer that deprives mouth bacteria of thiamine. Without thiamine, the mouth-germs that cause bad breath cannot live.

When you are worried about "aging breath", rinse with Steri/sol. Steri/sol is specially designed to combat these particular breath problems. The germ killing action of Hexetidine starts immediately, and within 15 minutes up to 95% of bad breath bacteria are eliminated. And because the Hexetidine in Steri/sol clings to mouth and gum tissues, the bactericidal action keeps on working up to 10 hours to help you feel really sure about your breath.

Put Steri/sol to work on bad breath right away. It does cost more than you might usually pay for a mouthwash, but then Steri/sol is not your usual mouthwash. Sold only at pharmacies.

Catfish by the Million

ELDORADO, Ill. (AP) — Ten years ago, Dr. Dale Cavaness, chief of surgery at Pearce Hospital in Eldorado, became interested in fish as a hobby, especially catfish. Now he has a half-million of them.

Cavaness, 46, had some property with a lake in nearby Galatia. Then he bought 560 acres of pasture and gully land at Herod, near the Ohio River, in southeastern Illinois.

On this new section, through which two spring-fed creeks wander, he is scooping out reservoirs, terraced lakes and ponds. He advanced to this $400,000 catfish farm from a little aquarium of tropical fish he had at his home.

"The farming and harvesting of catfish potentially could give me more income than my medical practice," says Cavaness, a small, cheerful man with an infectious laugh.

"I work 17 hours a day, five days a week, at the hospital. I used to get away from it all playing golf. But nothing takes my mind off the routine like these catfish."

Cavaness foresees the day when he will franchise pay-to-fish lakes, stocking them from his catfish farm, and predicts the day will come when catfish compete with trout, perch and bass, in the housewife's frying pan.

"It's made up of alfalfa, soybeans, vitamins, bone meal and blood meal," he says. "If a catfish is fed right, ie tastes wonderful. They are juicier than trout, not fishy tasting, not flaky and have no odor. The trick to cleaning them is pulling off the skin. Then you can eat them almost like a banana.

Press Barred From Meet

TORONTO (CP) — The news media will be barred from discussions at a forthcoming conference on Canada's criminal justice system, it was announced Thursday.

Announcing the news blackout on the three-day National Conference on the Disposition of Offenders, organizer John Edwards of the University of Toronto said many of the 120 judges, police chiefs, prison and parole officials invited would not attend if the sessions were open to the press.

Russia-U.S. Ban On Armament Hinted

By BERNARD D. NOSSITER
The Washington Post

LONDON — U.S. Secretary of Sate William Rogers reportedly told British leaders Thursday that President Nixon expects to sign a SALT accord in Moscow curbing both offensive and defensive missiles.

This was the message transmitted to newsmen by British and American sources following Rogers' talks with Sir Alec Douglas-Home, the foreign secretary.

American officials said they were reasonably confident that Nixon's forthcoming trip would yield an agreement on strategic weapons. They pointedly declined to deny a Washington Post report that the deal would limit the United States and the Soviet Union to two ABM sites each and freeze the total of land and sea-based offensive missiles.

British officials reporting on the Rogers-Home discussions went a bit further. They indicated that the Post account was accurate in outline.

The briefings thus deliberately accented the positive and thereby obscured what was said about the deteriorating situation in Vietnam. It is known that the subject was discussed by the two foreign ministers at lunch. Presumably, it came up again Thursday afternoon when Rogers saw Prime Minister Edward Heath for nearly an hour. However, both sides stifled efforts to discover what was said.

★ ★ ★

A possible clue to diplomatic action was offered by an American official. In response to a question, he suggested that Washington was not wedded to President Nguyen Van Thieu's regime in South Vietnam. He recalled that an American peace proposal provided for Thieu's resignation just before new elections.

This could be taken as a hint that Washington is considering the replacement of Thieu now as one element in a fresh peace plan.

In Tiny Mauritius, Everybody's Politician

PORT LOUIS, Mauritius (AP) — "Psst," said a bearded youth, stepping into the night out of a Volkswagen. "Are you foreign reporters?"

A British correspondent, in town to cover the recent visit of Queen Elizabeth, seized the scene with alacrity and said from the corner of his mouth: "Oo wants t'know?"

The scene reflected politics in Mauritius, an Indian Ocean nation which pays allegiance to the British Queen, speaks French, looks Indian and trades in Chinese shops.

The mysterious youth presented the case of the Mauritian Militant Movement, an opposition party with wide support until it backed disastrous strikes that closed the docks 42 days over Christmas.

Glancing about the government agents, he said about 70 politicians, including the movement's leadership, were jailed before the royal visit. Many, he reported, were on hunger strikes. It was all true.

After several months of sporadic violence and demonstrations the British-style parliamentary government equipped itself with emergency powers to arrest anyone threatening the peace.

Leaders face acid criticism in a society where even the beggars and bar girls have a political pitch to make.

Running the country is not easy. Parts of this island of 720 square miles are hopelessly overcrowded, and the labor force is 20 per cent unemployed. The economy depends almost solely on sugar.

Only 6.4 per cent of the island is urbanized. Sugar, forests, tea and a toy-sized range of Alps take up most of the space. The island is all alone at sea, 1,250 miles from Africa.

Today's unrest is hardly a surprise to students of the island's tumultuous history. The first residents, oversized pigeons called dodos, were hounded to extinction in the 1600s by Dutch settlers and the dogs and rats they left behind.

The French took over in 1721, and held on until 1814 when Britain moved in. Mauritius was an English colony until 1968. Nearly any resident who speaks English has a Charles Boyer accent.

Islanders clung tenaciously to slavery and then switched to importing labor from Indian slums. That brought waves of cholera and smallpox to add to the periodic ravages of hurricanes.

The eventful effect was an economy based on storm-resistant sugar cane and a polyglot society of stratified layers.

UNEMPLOYMENT SERIOUS

Indians make up two-thirds of the 820,000 population. Creoles, mixtures of French and Africans, number 219,000. The "grand blancs" who claim pure blood total about 10,000 but control most of the sugar money. There are also 25,000 Chinese, from migrations generations ago.

Although some communal and religious tension keeps the surface rippled, the main problem appears to be finding work for everyone.

Heavy pushing has boosted tea cultivation and tourism but both industries depend largely on South Africa. Mauritius could make more money if it were friendlier, planners say, but that is politically unpopular because of South Africa's policy of white supremacy.

Hoteliers express confidence that the island's beaches, rich reefs and jagged little mountains can attract enough visitors from Europe to raise the tourism figure to 55,000 from 27,000 in a few years.

One idea which has had limited success is luring export industries seeking cheap labor to turn out things like wigs, radios and knitted shirts. Plenty of women are available to work for 40 cents a day. Many families of five live on $200 a year.

At the other extreme, technicians and professional people such as doctors are leaving Mauritius for better pay elsewhere. Each year, 10,000 graduates leave school with little chance for a decent job.

Israeli Druze a Broker of Power

By ALFRED FRIENDLY
The Washington Post

ACRE, Israel — Sheikh Jaber Nuadi is in the power brokerage business since, by definition, that is what a sheikh does for a living. Being one of two Druzes in the Israeli parliament and, more important, the deputy minister of communications, he is in a favorable position for operations. The ministry has a large budget and employs 13,312 workers, over the selection and disposition of some of whom, one may suppose, Sheikh Jaber could have something to say.

Good administration clearly demanding that the deputy minister work amiably in double harness with the ministry's director of manpower, it was only natural that, a few days ago, the former entertained the latter. The affair was a feast in the sheikh's house in his home town. I was invited along with a stymie of Israeli bureaucrats, their wives and some other Americans.

Sheikh Jaber lives in Yarka, a settlement of four or five thousand Druzes about 10 miles south of the Lebanese frontier. Like Druze settlements everywhere, the big village of square-cut stone, box-like houses and narrow winding streets is perched dramatically on top of the highest hill in the neighborhood. It commands a breath-taking view over the valley of Zebulon.

A chunky middle-aged man, the sheikh was swathed in a black gown over which he wore a well-tailored suit jacket. Unlike the splendidly mustachioed other elders of Yarka, Sheikh Jaber was clean-shaven.

Up one flight from the street, the room where he received us was enormous, the size of three village houses, with a vaulted ceiling painted like a Christmas confection. Save for a small table and chairs of breakfast-nook variety lost in the middle distance, and a telephone on a shelf jutting from the wall, the room was devoid of furniture, a great cavern surrounded on three sides by cushioned banquettes.

The floor was carpeted wall-to-wall, but with individual rugs — garish as only a factory could dream them up. Chromos, of matching taste, hung on the walls. Around the room, rising about five feet from the chair-rail, was a panelling of gilded plaster in whorls and scrolls done by an indefatigable finger-painter.

The lunch, for 30, was in the lower room into which had been insinuated a long table and chairs while the guests were above admiring the formidable collection of the sheikh's kitsch.

To my surprise — for Druzes take seriously the prophet's injunction against alcohol — there were clusters of whisky and wine bottles strategically placed along the table.

We had gorged our fill — olives, creamy white cheese, tomato-cucumber-and-mint-leaf salad, snippets of roast kidney, highly spiced hamburger morsels, meat-stuffed dumplings and bounteous servings of delicious fish, all accompanied by unleavened bread. When the main course arrived, a whole roast sheep covered from head to pure-fat tail with almonds and riding on a mountain of saffron rice. Once displayed, it was removed to another table to be carved and apportioned. I was relieved, having heard of how middle east magnificoes do the ultimate in hospitality by handing out the eyes to the honored guests.

The Le-chaims throughout the meal were endless: We drank long life to the sheikh, the guests, the Druzes, Israel, the ministry of communications, its manpower director, and many others. Sheikh Jaber did his toasting in soda water.

After lunch, over coffee and honey-and-pinenut pastries, I gestured to the six-pointed Stars of David and seven-branched candlesticks embroidered on the pillows on the banquettes and asked a lady translator if the Druzes did not seem to get on better with the Jews than the Arabs.

"Druzes are such a small minority," she replied, "that their overwhelming imperative is always to determine which is the strongest force about them and to ally themselves with it. In the home of a Druze sheikh across the border in Syria, you can be sure, Nasser's picture would be on the wall."

Israel Inviting Tourists to Anniversary

JERUSALEM (WP) — For her 25th anniversary year, starting in September, 1972, Israel has in mind an "open house" with the accent on service to an estimated one million tourists rather than on big splashy events.

Earlier elaborate plans for mass celebrations were shelved after a recent Israeli government meeting. The consensus was that a less ambitious schedule of events may, in the final analysis, be a better way to mark the silver jubilee of Israeli statehood.

Details have not yet been worked out. The Israeli government has appointed a committee of three of its members, headed by Prime Minister Golda Meir, to approve the plan of celebrations. It now seems that the main events of the anniversary year will be a military parade on Independence Day, April 19, an economic conference, and a gala exhibition to demonstrate Israeli accomplishments in the quarter-century of independence.

The restrained, more austere approach is a result of a number of factors, of which perhaps the most important is the fear that an overcrowded agenda might be more of a liability than an asset to Israel's tourist industry. More than 850,000 tourists are now expected to show up here next year. If many more are attracted by special events, they may find that there are simply not enough hotel rooms, buses and trained personnel to handle all of them.

A flood of complaints was received last year from tourists who fumed about hotel overbookings, poor food in restaurants and "kickbacks" by gift shops to tour guides. The ministry of tourism pointed out Israel was not prepared in 1971 for the unexpected 49 per cent increase in visitors.

Many Israelis believe that the "regular" calendar of events is varied enough and crowded enough to satisfy the tastes of all visitors. They feel that if these events, such as the singing and dancing in the streets on Independence Day or the choirs festivals in August, are genuinely Israeli celebrations rather than "tourist attractions," the guests in Israel will appreciate them more.

There are also other reasons why there is a tendency to advocate "low profile" celebrations. Not the least of them is the recent severe cuts in the government budget. It is now expected that all ministries will spend less on anniversary plans than had been previously anticipated.

Even the "modest" calendar of events, scheduled for September, 1972, to September, 1973, leaves the average tourist plenty to choose, from starting with the official declaration of the anniversary year in September, a conference of the state of Israel bonds in January; a world-wide assembly honoring the Histadruth, the Israel labor federation, which will take place in February; an Independence Day parade in May, and the Israeli art show which will move from one museum to another between April and September.

In summer months, when the tourist season reaches its peak, the number of planned activities is the highest. In July there will be the Maccabiade (international sports competition) and the "Zimria" choir festival. The annual Israel summer festival of music and arts will take place in August and in September there will be an international harp competition and the world congress of the International Policemen Association.

As mentioned, additional, more formal events are yet to be planned. For example: the ceremony in which the start of the anniversary year will be proclaimed as well as other state occasions still have to be finalized. Also to be decided is the way Jewish communities abroad will be asked to join in the festivities.

The estimate of tourists that can be expected in Israel during this period is based on the phenomenal leap forward in the nation's tourist industry in recent years. Between 1970 and 1971 the number of visitors reached 657,000. To this number one must add the 110,000 visitors from neighboring Arab countries who were allowed to come to Israel during the summer months While the main purpose of these arrivals is to visit their relatives in Israel, experience has shown that they, too, are making use of tourist facilities and seeing many of the sights.

The number of tourists who have arrived here during the first three months of 1972 shows that this upward surge is continuing and that the estimate of 850,000 tourists this year and perhaps nearly a million in 1973 is not exaggerated.

The tourist industry is now preparing to meet the challenge. Main bottleneck is the number of hotel rooms. Already 8,700 rooms are under construction. These will be added, within the next few years, to the present 14,000 rooms in tourist hotels. A number of hotels now being built, such as the Jerusalem Hilton, will not be ready before 1974 and thus will not be in operation during the anniversary year.

In order to relieve the immediate shortage of rooms, the ministry of tourism has instituted a "room bank" through which tourists are sent to stay in private homes —300 such rooms are already available. The Israeli authorities know, however, that facilities are not unlimited and that a dissatisfied tourist is something the country must avoid at all costs.

Many millions of dollars at present are being invested in enlarging the passenger terminal of Lod international airport, and most airlines are increasing the number of their flights to Israel. This summer, El Al Israel Airlines will have 30 flights a week from New York to Israel—13 nonstop. In the last three years El Al increased the number of available seats over the Atlantic by 150 per cent. Other airlines also expanded their services to Israel.

El Al now has two Boeing 747s. TWA and BOAC also have a daily 747 flight. Lufthansa brings one of its jumbos to Lod occasionally. In anticipation of the increased traffic during the anniversary, El Al may acquire its third 747 and has applied for landing rights at other U.S. airports. The company argues that if the U.S. authorities grant its request, it could considerably improve its service to tourists visiting Israel.

"We are not worried"—one El Al executive explains. "We have overcome other difficulties in the past. I am sure we shall manage with the silver jubilee traffic. Let them only come."

It was an incredible bargain (at least half the price you'd have paid at home). And certainly, one of the luckiest finds of your entire roam-around-antique hunting holiday in Britain.

You'd stayed overnight at Brighton and were well on your way to London before you missed your camera. So you changed your plans and headed back again. And that's when you saw them; the silver lanes of Brighton, tucked away in a section of the resort you'd never noticed before. Hustling and bustling and an absolute treasure trove of silver mementos, curios and antiques.

Sure, it was a lucky turn of events and one that wouldn't have happened if you hadn't had your own car—and the holiday independence to go where you want—when you want. And change your plans at the last moment if you felt like it.

Independence Holidays: your car and hotel for just over $12 a day per person.

This summer, because we think an airline should offer more than just a "seat" to Europe and back, we worked out ways to give you all the holiday independence you could want—at the best price. And they're all Air Canada exclusives.

Like an Avis car with special economical rates—from $10.25 a day with unlimited mileage. And three types of accommodation starting at only $7 a night in over 500 hotels in 20 countries. (All offers are based on two sharing and must be arranged before you leave).

And although they're all 7 day minimums—the days needn't be consecutive; you can scatter them over your entire stay, buy several packages, mix and match to suit your plans.

Another Independence offering is our "Open Jaw" option. You can fly into any of our 11 European destinations, tour around and leave from whichever city is closest to you —for little or no extra charge.

All this on top of a new 22-45 day excursion fare that's almost as low as charter. But unlike charter—we don't tell you when you have to go and come home. Every day of the week this summer, our famous Western Arrow flight leaves direct for London (including non-stop on Friday)—and you could be on it. You just book and go—and you can change your return date in Europe. Your children under 12 can fly for half fare. And you can charge it all on your credit card.

Add it all up; the holiday values, the new fares and the daily Western Arrow flight—then work it out. The charter "seat". Or the Air Canada holiday. Which is really the better bargain? Ask your travel agent. And come see what you've been missing.

Wonderful World of Animals

By DR. FRANK MILLER

DEAR DR. MILLER: Squirmy, our wirehair, and Squat, our Great Dane, are the same age, 7, and raised together since they were puppies. Now Squat rambles around like an old lady and Squirmy is an energetic and as full of life as when he was a puppy. They have both had the same good care and neither has had any serious illness. Why then is Squat looking so old so soon? — K.S.

DEAR K.S.: Heredity is the big difference here. Squirmy's breed is traditionally long-lived. In fact, the terrier breeds form a substantial percentage of those canines making it beyond the 15-year mark. Unfortunately for Squat, she can't claim this advantage. Most giant breeds are comparatively short-lived. Their average lifespan is seceral years less than the average for all breeds of dogs. While accidents and disease in various forms, malnutrition, infectious disease, tumors, play an important role in all species in determining lifespan, the potential for each is of course basically dependent upon (so far) unalterable hereditary factors.

DEAR DR. MILLER: Kissing gouramis are one of my favorite fish. They are so affectionate, and all, but they start losing weight as soon as I get them and within a few days they are positively skinny. I feed them daily with all the other fish and they are the only ones that have this problem. How come? — M.K.

DEAR M.K.: Kissing gouramis burn up a lot of fuel with their varying activities. Not only that, they have a high rate of metabolism. Under natural conditions they are nibblers, on food, that is, working at algae and other food organisms most of the time. Unless the aquarium is loaded with algae and kept that way, they simply can't maintain their weight on a once-a-day, formal feeding schedule. They can get by without the algae, however, if they are fed high quality commercial foods at least three times daily.

PERSPECTIVES AND PREJUDICES

Politics From the Pulpit Justified

By REV. J. A. DAVIDSON

Some years ago I had a rather unnerving experience while conducting a service in a little church in rural Saskatchewan. As I began the sermon an elderly lady sitting in a pew near the front reached up and switched off her hearing-aid.

It was with great difficulty that I stumbled through that sermon.

A few days earlier I had said "No" when the lady had invited me to sign the Stockholm Peace Appeal, which some of you will remember as a rather clever Communist gambit in the early years of the Cold War.

My refusal annoyed the lady. She quoted "Blessed are the peacemakers" at me, and she wondered how I would dare preach the Gospel of Jesus Christ, the Prince of Peace, when, obviously, I was not in favor of peace. I tried to explain to her that I certainly was in favor of peace but that I could not see the Stockholm Appeal as a genuine exercise in peacemaking.

But she judged me a pretty tepid Christian and a pretty unworthy minister — and the next Sunday morning she expressed her opinion of me in that disconcertingly dramatic manner.

Looking back on it now, I find it rather refreshing to have been chastised for being un-Red. In more recent years I have been labelled "pinkish" for showing a lack of enthusiasm for the American adventure in Vietnam, for preaching and writing about reform of divorce law, the abolition of capital punishment, and the pollution issue.

On the other hand, I have provided occasions for persons to label me "establishmentarian" and "smug reactionary hinding behind the cloak of religion." I guess this is just another of the occupational hazards of the ministry in these days of suspicion and confrontation.

"Breathes there the preacher with soul so dead
His congregation has never called him 'Red.'"

To that I would add:

"Breathes there the preacher with soul so bent

It is true, of course, that we ministers are sometimes presumptuously inept and dangerously ill-informed on public issues — but, then, so are some businessmen and labor leaders and professors and politicians and journalists.

I think it irresponsible and pastorally devastating for a minister to try to promote the cause of a political party from his pulpit. But let no one deny a minister his right, the right of all citizens in a democracy, to affiliate with the party of his choice.

Party politics, despite its excesses and abberations and ambiguities, is of the heart of democratic order as we know it — and the wider Christian witness can be made through political parties and other agencies of public life.

A good rule-of-thumb for all Christians was given by the late Reinhold Niebuhr: "The Christian must not disturb the established order irresponsibly, but the Christian must not accept the established order complacently."

British Church Merger Scheme Fails

LONDON (CP) — Supporters of the ecumenical cause are expressing dismay now that the projected merger of the Church of England and the Methodists has again failed to win adequate acceptance in the Anglican general synod.

But the Archbishop of Canterbury, while showing sadness over the setback, has urged advocates of church unity to remain steadfast.

"Although this had not come off," said Archbishop Michael Ramsey in a reference to the Anglican-Methodist merger, "there are many signs in all the churches of the conviction that they must work together as fellow Christians."

The general synod's failure Wednesday to give the unification plan the required 75-per-cent over-all majority is described by an editorial in the Daily Telegraph as "a sad setback to the cause of church unity."

A total of 34 out of the 40 voting bishops supported the merger. But 80 of the 232 clergy in the synod voted against the proposal as did 87 among the 234 laity present.

The project thus won only 65.8 per cent of the votes on an issue which has been a subject of great controversy in the Anglican church for 25 years.

Causing anxiety in some ecumentical quarters was the question of whether the Wednesday vote would add to skepticism about Christianity and especially institutionalized Christianity.

The Guardian refers to a fear that the latest evidence of continuing church fragmentation "is likely to deter rather than attract a nation held to be largely indifferent to the claims of the Christian religion."

Opponents of the unity plan concentrated some of their criticism on what they considered to be the ambiguity of the proposed service of reconciliation which forms part of the merger formula.

The Telegraph cited "strongly-entrenched" groupings of "high-church" and evangelical elements within the Church of England as one factor in the latest rejection.

But some observers saw the vote as a prelude to still more discussions about possible Anglican-Methodist unity.

On the other hand, The Daily Express urged an end to the merger attempts.

The Wednesday vote should be an end to the matter, the Beaverbrook paper argues, and the Anglican Church "can now devote all its energies to its main task."

This task is "to preach the Gospel and forget about takeover bids," The Express says.

LODGES PAY BOUNTY FOR MERCURY SIGNS

KENORA, Ont. (CP) — A lodge operator says some Indians in this northwestern Ontario area were paid a bottle of whisky for each mercury warning sign they took down and delivered to certain tourist camp owners.

Barney Lamm, who operates a lodge at Ball Lake, told the Hamilton Spectator Wednesday that these tourist camp owners then wrote to their regular guests from the United States saying it was safe to come and fish. He did not name the owners.

The warning signs recommend fishing for fun only and tell fishermen not to eat the fish because of mercury contamination.

Lamm and a number of other lodge owners in the English River system have not opened their facilities since high levels of mercury were found in fish in the area in 1970.

He has launched a suit against companies cited by the Ontario government as mercury polluters.

Lamm said the operators who paid the bounty for signs knew the government wouldn't replace the ones taken down.

41. B-Q5	K-Q3
42. B-B3	RxRP
43. P-B6	K-K3
44. R-K8ch	Resigns (1)

(a) A difficult variation for Black.

(b) Thus far as in the game Stahlberg-Dr. Filip, Helsinki, 1952. Black played 12 . . . P-R3; 13, P-B4 with the better game.

(e) Not 20. NxR, when Black wins a piece by 20 . . . B-R4.

(f) Has no time to rescue the Bishop, as Q-N5ch is threatened.

(g) This move eventually wins the KP.

(h) Not 33 BxPch, RxB.

(i) If 44 . . . K-Q2; 45. P-B7; or 44 . . . K-B2; 45. B-R5 mate.

THE ISRAELI CHAMPIONSHIP

Going into the final round for the championship at Tel Aviv, it looked like a shoo-in for last year's champion Elie Kagan to repeat for the title.

However, Kagan lost his last-round game in 107 moves and almost 12 hours of play, giving Uzi Geller the national championship. He is the first kibbutznik to win the title!

Nine Lives for Communist

KARDITSA, Greece — A 67-year-old Greek Communist leader was sentenced by a criminal court Thursday night to life imprisonment nine times on charges arising from the Communist rebellion 25 years ago.

Demetrios Parisalides was charged with being the moral instigator of the murder of seven Greeks during the rebellion from 1947 to 1948 and with having attempted to annex parts of Greece to Bulgaria, Albania and Yugoslavia.

NORMAN, Okla. — "My body's no big deal," a 23-year-old woman told her English class at the University of Oklahoma, "but here goes." She then stripped nude.

Mrs. Wendy Berlowitz said she did it to change "a society which doesn't allow me to appear in my birthday suit at any time I please. I believe our nudity laws are insane." Mrs. Berlowitz, a graduate student instructor, already had been told by the university she would not be rehired next year.

CHICAGO — Stombecker Corp., the 96-year-old manufacturers of the Kewpie Doll, says Kewpie collectors surveyed report they are willing to pay at least $90 for a six-inch doll that sold for 25 cents in 1920.

"Many of the later Kewpies have a value of $50 to $60 among collectors," Richard Shure, executive vice president of the firm said Thursday. "The price of antique kewpies may have something to do with their recent revival in popularity."

HALIFAX — Leonard Savoie, the Caraquet, N.B., man who required oxygen treatment in a navy decompression chamber to fight an infection of gas gangrene, is improving, doctors said Thursday.

The 31-year-old patient, seriously injured in an automobile mishap, developed lung complications following special treatment in the Canadian Forces decompression chamber. The treatment was the only effective way to inhibit a leg infection that resulted from the accident.

LEGER

TORONTO — African society is endangered by the evils of Western industrial technology, Paul-Emile Cardinal Leger said in an interview Thursday.

The 68-year-old former archbishop of Montreal said the West is hoarding its wealth, while exporting "television sets and transistor radios" to Africa. "You in your civilization are raising life standards, but bringing about pollution in nature and the need for welfare, and you try to export it," he said.

LONDON — Writer Leslie Charteris, 65-year-old creator of The Saint detective series, escaped the flaming wreckage of his automobile Thursday, moments after a multiple highway collision west of London.

Police said Charteris' chauffeur pulled the Singapore-born writer, an American citizen, from the blazing car following the accident on the M4 Motorway. The author was treated for bruises and shock at a nearby hospital.

OTTAWA — A grateful constituent came here Thursday to thank Prime Minister Trudeau for his help in reuniting her with her brother from the Soviet Union.

Mrs. Cyla Chaiken of Montreal was joined by her brother and his family earlier this month. Trudeau brought up the matter of Canadian families attempting to have relatives from the Soviet Union join them when he was in Moscow last year and when Soviet Premier Kosygin came here on a return visit last fall.

HOLLYWOOD — Bruce Cabot, 67, whose starred in the 1933 film classic King Kong, died this week of lung cancer.

Cabot, who played the young man who rescued actress Fay Wray from the clutches of the ape in King Kong, came to Hollywood at the age of 26. He was in several movies in the 1960s with his close friend, John Wayne. Among the films were The Green Berets in 1968 and Big Jake in 1971. He also had a role in Diamonds are Forever, in 1971.

Land Bank Painted Red By Saskatchewan Critics

CALGARY (CP)—Cries of "communism" have greeted one of two land programs in two Prairie legislatures.

The complaints came from the 15-member Liberal Opposition in Saskatchewan as the major piece of legislation, a land bank, was brought in during a spring session which prorogued Friday with the New Democratic Party government putting through a record 158 bills, many of a housekeeping nature.

Premier Allan Blakeney's 45 NDP members set up the bank which permits farmers to sell their land to the government. The house was told the measure would give young farmers a chance to get into agriculture and others a chance to expand, while allowing older men to sell and retire.

Basically, it permits the government to rent the purchased land with an option to buy after five years.

At Edmonton, a bill featuring a $30-million development fund which Alberta hopes to co-ordinate with the federal government's proposed small farms program was given first reading Friday.

This fund is aimed at helping the small family farm by providing low-interest loans for development and consolidation of debt. Agriculture Minister Hugh Horner said his Progressive Conservative government has been negotiating with Ottawa to have the two plans amalgamated.

Bus Firm Expands

WINNIPEG (CP) — Flyer Industries Ltd., a bus manufacturing company 74 per cent owned by the Manitoba Development Corp., Friday announced plans to build a 150,000 square foot plant in Winnipeg for the construction of bus bodies for American Motors General Corp.

★ ★ ★

Closing Discussed

REGINA (CP) — Premier Allan Blakeney said he would be favorably disposed to amending the liquor bill to require beverage rooms to close earlier than cocktail lounges.

The bill now before the legislature would permit beverage rooms to stay open until 1:30 a.m., the same as is recommended for cocktail lounges, but same concern was expressed by both sides on the extended hours during second reading of the bill Friday.

Sunday Exhibition

EDMONTON (CP)— The exhibition grounds will be open on a Sunday for the first time in its 94-year history and an application may be made to serve liquor with meals Sunday, July 23, Jack Bailey, president of the Edmonton Exhibition Association, said Friday.

Bailey said no games of chance or gambling will be allowed. Rides, exhibit buildings, displays, food services and the grandstand show will be open, thus increasing Klondike Day to 10 days from nine.

'Nobody Plans To Die From Drugs'

(The following letter was received by the Times Friday. We can vouch for its authenticity. But to spare other members of the family further grief, we publish it without names.)

Last week my son died in his bedroom, in Victoria.

There are ignorant people who would have looked at his long hair and said, "hippy" in the same tone one might use for garbage.

But how many boys have taken a city-wide trophy for their elementary schools, in track?

How many boys of twelve would voluntarily have carried a six-year-old sister on their backs when she was tired?

How many boys in their early teens go to the Empress and hold their mothers' chairs and coats for them? (He said, "I just want people to see that long hair doesn't make you sub-human.")

And how many boys, long-haired or otherwise, have ridden a bicycle over the Malahat with another guy to spend a week fishing, sleeping in the open, cooking for themselves and then riding back? (Making sure to phone Mother so that she doesn't worry!)

How many boys of sixteen embrace their mothers and other loved ones regardless of surroundings?

It was important to him not to be "sub" anything. He had — I should say "has" because we still feel it — incredible compassion, insight far beyond his sixteen years, and HAD a strong desire to go to college.

That he overdosed on God knows what drug was a hideous mistake. I am certain, as is anyone who knew him, that it was not a part of his plan to die now.

No one, with the possible exception of addicts, which he was not, really plans to die from drugs. Still it happens.

Therefore, I want to congratulate you on your series about drug abuse. Do, please, continue them: Further than planned, if possible.

Hue Next Target

Times News Services

SAIGON — Communist forces stormed a major South Vietnamese position on strategic Highway 14 north of the Central Highlands city of Pleiku today, killing or wounding more than 100 defenders including one American, field reports indicate.

In the north, North Vietnamese troops applied heavy pressure on government units within seven miles of Hue, well within the main government defence line of the city.

In nearly four hours of fighting on Highway 14, at least 36 Communists were killed inside the barbed-wire perimeter of Artillery Base 42, about six miles north of Pleiku and 236 miles north of Saigon, the reports said. U.S. military spokesmen said one of the dead was a U.S. adviser.

COMMAND POST

A force of about 1,000 South Vietnamese paratroopers has been attempting to clear Highway 14 between Pleiku and the province capital of Kontum, 30 miles to the north. Military spokesmen said 75 Communist soldiers were killed Friday in a clash nine miles south of Kontum and government losses put at nine dead and 37 wounded.

LUSH POT PATCH 'NEVER TENDED'

OTTAWA (CP) — Foud Hajjar, 47, who denied any knowledge of how a 4,535-plant "pot patch" sprouted in his back yard last summer, was found guilty Friday of unlawfully cultivating marijuana.

A botanical expert testified that the marijuana plants, some of which towered 18 feet above the ground, were "cultivated, watered, fertilized and cultured."

A neighbor testified to seeing Hajjar watering the yard between 7:30 and 8 a.m. each morning for months.

Hajjar denied he ever sprinkled the yard and said he had never done any digging there after one job to remedy a balky septic tank.

He will be sentenced later.

U.S. Dollar Deal Carried Through

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States will formally devalue its dollar at noon EDT Monday, carrying out a bargain struck in late December with the richest non-Communist countries.

Treasury Secretary John Connally said Friday he will notify the International Monetary Fund Monday that the new par value of the dollar is one thirty-eighth of an ounce of gold instead of the previous one thirty-fifth, a devaluation of 8.57 per cent.

The declaration is strictly formal, but it is the last official step by the United States to fulfil its agreement to devalue the dollar.

Since last December, when the international monetary agreement was reached, major nations have been trading their money as if the dollar was already devalued, adopting a new system of currency exchange rates which also included revaluation of several other currencies.

It is the first time since 1934 that the dollar has been devalued.

Congress made the move possible by raising the official price of gold to $38 from $35 an ounce. That bill was passed and signed into law by President Nixon March 31.

The treasury waited another month for passage of an appropriations bill enabling the U.S. to fulfil so-called "maintenance-of-value" obligations in international organizations.

The monetary agreement reached in December is only an interim settlement. The major nations are expected to get together this year to begin discussing reform of the world monetary system, a job that is expected to take a year or perhaps two.

CHIEF JAILER for Canada's prisons Jean-Pierre Goyer, unveils a model of a vocational building some of the prisoners at William Head Minimum Security Institution will construct this year. Looking on is Ivan Busky, spokesman for the prisoners, who applauded the solicitor-general's plans to change prisons into rehabilitation centres but who maintained that as a start more prisoners should be put to work on this project.

B.C. Skimping In Heroin War

By ROBERT OLVER
Times Staff

(Last in a series)

The province of British Columbia, which Premier Bennett continually refers to as one of the richest in Canada, deals with about six times the number of heroin addicts as does Ontario, and on less than one-tenth the budget.

That does not indicate, as politicians might have us believe, that B.C. gets six times the mileage out of its money. It means simply, according to those people who are in the front lines of the war against drug abuse, that B.C. has not come to serious grips with the problem.

Here is how the agencies which deal with narcotics addition in B.C. get their money, according to Douglas Denholme, executive director of the B.C. Narcotics Addiction Foundation.

"The money comes in a very complicated way from seven departments or agencies of two governments — the federal and the B.C. government," he said.

For 1972-73 the budgeted grant from the B.C. provincial secretary's department is $300,000. The federal solicitor-general's department, on a fee-for-service basis — which relates to the number of patients actually being treated — will contribute about $20,000.

There will be additional funds from the provincial secretary's department for special projects. The amount in any given year is difficult to predict and depends on what projects are proposed and approved.

The NAF's soft drug operation is supported by an $85,000 grant from the federal health and welfare department. The operation's projected cost is $120,000.

In total, the NAF's projected budget for 1972-73 is $720,000. Of this, $38,000 is for research, $71,000 for education, $238,000 for treatment, $155,000 for rehabilitation and $141,000 for prevention.

He claimed that Ontario's Drug and Alcohol Research Foundation has a $7.5 million budget.

Says Denholme: "We have a program which touches all the bases. But because of the amount of money we have available, we are forced to react rather than to lead.

"It is very easy for organizations like ours to scream that

'WORKING PRISONER' PROJECT UNVEILED

By BRYAN McGILL
Times Staff

Solicitor-General Jean-Pierre Goyer Friday envisioned the end of laziness in Canada's penal institutions as he officially kicked off a pilot pay-for-work project at William Head Minimum Security Institution in Metchosin.

Before a host of newsmen and a few of the prisoners chosen to do the work, and flanked by prison officials, local politicians and dignitaries, Goyer took opportunity to express his ideas of a rehabilitated prisoner.

He said about 20 inmates, paid the minimum federal wage of $1.75 an hour, will construct the $278,000 vocational training building which will be "a first step to fully recognize that prisoners are still citizens."

In "a new system that will specialize in treating inmates as individuals," Goyer said, "we don't want to play motherhood. We want them to take up their own responsibilities.

"Do we want a good prisoner or a good citizen?" he asked.

After the ceremony, it was learned that William Head inmates see themselves as individuals with rights and who do want to work.

In an interview, Ivan Busky, 25, chairman of the inmate committee, said most of William Head's 120 prisoners are unhappy about the project because only 20 of them, at most, will be allowed to work on the project.

"They're feeling left out," he said.

He said prison officials had earlier given the impresion that everybody would be involved.

Busky said most of the inmates there are serving their last year and when they leave without any money some will "pull a score to get money to exist."

Those picked to do the work are qualified tradesmen, and from the $1.75 they make they will pay income tax, Canada pension, unemployment insurance and fees for room, board and clothing. Inmates at large are paid 85 cents a day for regular prison duties.

Busky said inmates could learn trades by working on the job, in addition to the vocational courses now offered.

He said the inmate committee will continue to try to negotiate with prison officers on getting more prisoners involved, but "we are being blocked."

Jail superintendent Gamaliel Milner commented that only "a few are dissatisfied."

He said there isn't enough work for more than 20 prisoners and added that if 20 qualified tradesmen can't be found within William Head others will be brought in from other prisons in B.C.

Busky also maintained the minimum security prison isn't as liberal as it makes out to be.

"They don't trust you as much as they let on."

He said that he himself was granted 198 passes in the me-

Irish March

BELFAST (UPI) — Barely 100 persons turned out today for the first legal protest march in Northern Ireland in nine months while scattered shootings continued across the religiously-torn province.

Fight Called Off

NEW DELHI (UPI) — The Indian and Pakistani governments ordered an end today to two days of fighting between Indian and Pakistani troops in Kashmir, apparently in fear the cease-fire violations would jeopardize the forthcoming Indo-Pakistan summit talks. They said the fighting had stopped.

Mine Toll Rises

KELLOGG, Idaho (Reuter) — Miners with respirator packs searching through the smoke-filled Sunshine silver mine late Friday night found three more bodies to bring the death toll in Tuesday's fire to 33. Mine manager Marvin Chase said hopes are still held for the 47 still missing, believed to be crouched around compressed air valves a mile deep in the mine.

Nine Die in Fire

SPRINGFIELD, Ill. (AP) — Nine persons were killed and 32 were injured today when an early-morning fire struck a nursing home.

Italian Plane Crash Kills, Burns 115

PALERMO, Sicily (Reuter) — Police and soldiers toiled all night in an attempt to recover the bodies of 115 persons killed when an Alitalia DC-8 jetliner exploded on a hillside here in Italy's worst air disaster.

Dawn revealed a terrifying scene of desolation on the harsh hillside above Palermo's Punta Raisi Airport, with wreckage and bodies, many charred and mutilated, scattered over more than a mile.

The 108 passengers, mostly Italians, and crew of seven died when the airliner, on a domestic flight from Rome to Palermo, exploded in a ball of flames while coming in to land in bad weather late Friday night.

Two military helicopters were called in at first light to help to recover bodies from the more inaccessible parts of the crash hill, 2,250-foot Montagna Lunga.

It was Italy's worst air disaster and came as Alitalia celebrated the 25th anniversary of its founding on May 5, 1947.

On the list of passengers, two passengers were identified only as Craighton and McCarthy and no further information was available.

Brothers Awaits Teachers' Attack

By BRIAN BUTTERS
Times Staff

VANCOUVER — Education Minister Donald Brothrs said Friday he expects the B.C. Teachers Federation to spend a "major proportion" of its $1.25 million political action fund against him in his home riding of Rossland-Trail.

Brothers made the comment at a press conference following his address to the annual convention of the B.C. School Trustees Associaion.

Asked if he is concerned about being the "favorite target" of the teachers in their campaign against provincial educational policies, Brothers said he is "very interested in their campaign."

"If it's a hard and sturdy fight they are looking for, they are going to get it from me in Rossland-Trail," he said. "I expect them to spend a major proportion of their fund against me."

Brothers also said he expects the BCTF to send their most politically-motivated speakers to his riding—"their storm troopers."

Asked if he would be willing to enter into a public debate on education with BCTF president Adam Robertson, Brothers did not make a direct response but said he expects the debate to "wax long and loud in Rossland-Trail."

The minister said in response to a question that he would be willing to answer any questions from Robertson through the government-sponsored Ask Your Provincial Govtrnment radio campaign.

Brothers said his office has been receiving two or three letters a day from teachers who object to the BCTF deducting money from their salary for political action. He said that right after last month's teacher convention the letters had been coming in at a rate of about six a day.

At least 100 letters like this have been received in total, he said. This is an indication of "resentment among a great number of teachers in the province," he said.

Brothers referred to the advertising battle being waged by the teachers and government against each other.

The BCTF has been running newspaper ads in the past month attempting to point out that teachers have not received excessive pay increases while the government has attempted to point out that education costs are spiralling out of control and that B.C. teachers are the highest paid in Canada.

Brothers said the reason for the government ads is that the press did not give sufficient information to the public in its coverage of Bill 3, which amended the Public Schools Act to place a limit on teacher salary increases and restrict school board spending.

"These are merely informational advertisements," he said.

He said the efforts made to educate the province's young people about drugs must be handled with extreme care, since inaccurate or incomplete statements will only cause young people to disbelieve whatever is said.

Brothrs also said it is important that school districts take a close look at the amount of money they are spending, particularly in the area of administration.

The Greater Victoria school board has just hired a firm of cost consultants to conduct a study of its own admininistration and costs. A report will be made in early July.

New Doctor Fee Schedule Agreement Seen Closer

The provincial government and British Columbia's 3,300 doctors appear to have reached agreement on fee increases after 16 months of bargaining.

While doctors have still to approve the changes in a referendum, directors of the B.C. Medical Association meeting in Vancouver Friday voted 28-4 to accept a government proposal which would see doctors guaranteed a minimum 6½ per cent increase in average earnings from medicare.

The government agreed to accept a new doctors' fee schedule, effective May 1. As with the old schedule, doctors will be paid 90 per cent of fees for services insured under medicare.

There is no ceiling on how much doctors can earn and they have the right to adjust their fee schedule, provided they match any fee increases with corresponding decreases elsewhere to keep medicare costs within an allotted budget.

The proposed revisions cover the next year, to April 1. Details of the proposal go to the profession Monday in a mail ballot, to be returned before the annual meeting of the BCMA which opens in Penticton May 24.

Directors said after Friday's meeting that details of the proposal would normally not be made public before they were given to the profession "but the pressure of public interest makes it advisable for this release at this time."

The board of the BCMA will recommend doctors accept the government offer.

Based on medicare payments of almost $128,000,000 in the year ending March 31 to 2,700 active doctors, their average gross income was $47,310.

With allowances for increases in population (8.7 per cent), number of doctors (to 2,900), fee adjustments and utilization, it's estimated the average payment by medicare to doctors in the next fiscal year will be $49,764 gross, an increase of 5.19 per cent.

If this proves to be the case, the government has undertaken to make up the difference to a minimum 6.5 per cent increase. But in practice, an increase in a fee for a service has generally produced greater utilization so that B.C.'s doctors over the next year may well increase earnings past the minimum 6½ per cent through their own efforts.

Schools Patronize The Arts

Merino at work.

Roger Lake and mural at Arbutus Secondary.

By HELEN MELNYK
Special to the Times

Students going up and down the stairway stopped to watch and comment on the progress of the 28-year-old Mexican artist's work. There was the occasional wolf-whistle of aesthetic appreciation from a passing female student.

Although the $100 a week he receives for painting at Oak Bay Senior Secondary School is barely enough to support himself, his wife and son, Merino isn't complaining.

He likes this job better than the previous one, installing wire fences on a part-time basis.

Like many other young Victoria artists, Merino found he could not make a living by his craft.

If an artist cannot get on payroll as a teacher, then the closest thing to a salary he would get was the monthly social assistance cheque, supplemented by odd jobs like putting in fences, gardening or carpentry.

Out of 35 applicants, 18 painters, musicians, and poets were chosen by a 5-man committee appointed by the school board to work for periods of 8 to 13 weeks. The school board criteria for the selection was that the applicant be unemployed and have ability. The artists are provided with all the materials they need.

In addition to providing employment, the program is designed to create an appreciation for art in students, and to beautify the schools, the official said.

Back at Oak Bay, Merino is in the ninth week of his 13-week job. For the time allowed, he has involved himself in an ambitious project — two murals on opposing walls, 21 by 22 feet and 21 by 15 feet. From a thick book full of sketches and the work already laid down, Merino pieced together the finished product. The subjects of the murals are youth's confrontation with society and youth's vitality, Merino explains.

"The only thing I want to do is to paint," he said. "But in this society I don't have the economic freedom to do what I want to survive. I have to put aside my art to perform menial tasks."

Merino feels that artists should be supported because they have a significant contribution to make to society.

"The role of an artist is to communicate ideas, and to create a beautiful and stimulating environment for others to live and work in. Through art history is recorded, and a country's tradition and identity is formed."

At Esquimalt senior secondary Jose Polutnik, a 34-year-old Yugoslavian expatriot, was putting the finishing touches on his sculpture, entitled Repose, a quartz abstract of a girl sitting down.

"Smart alecks," he muttered at the students heckling the finished product. During his 13-week stint, he has to do the rounds of seven schools, creating a piece at each. The reaction of students varies from school to school, he said.

"In some schools the students are very interested. They ask what it feels like. So I hand them the chisel and let them have a try."

Since his graduation from the Vancouver School of Art in 1962, Polutnik has been hauling rocks around. During the week he worked as a landscaper, spending evenings and weekends sculpturing out of stone.

Through he prefers working in the medium using now and in plastics, the $300 salary he was earning monthly, didn't allow for such extravangances "and rocks are lying around free for the taking."

Roger Lake was scrubbing down the doors at Arbutus senior secondary school yesterday after completing his 27 to 16 foot outdoor wall mural. The result is more of a "sign" than a mural, Lake said. He refused to explain what it was a sign of.

Of the three, Lake was the only one who had a job as a painter before being chosen for the local initiative program. He worked in the Greater Victoria Art Gallery as a house painter.

"Ironic, isn't it ? But I enjoyed the atmosphere", he said.

"An artist creating before everyone's eyes makes for direct contact with art without the whole social ritual that usually goes along with it. People put on their Sunday clothes to go to the venerate art in gallery that's quiet like a tomb. Each painting is enclosed in a box. Art should be alive at every moment."

Although the program is a stop-gap, it gives the artists some advertisement and an "ego lift," said Colin Graham, director of the Greater Victoria Art Gallery.

"If an artist feels that society appreciates and wants his product, he'll continue creating. Hopefully the young artists with real ability will make it."

Human Involvement in Dentistry for Poor

By AB KENT
Times Staff

Birdcalls help create human involvement in the capital's first full-range dental clinic for the poor.

"Therapy starts the moment you come in. There's human involvement," said Dr. Eugene Kaellis, a former research scientist, bookseller, university professor and academic.

With the help of Cool Aid, Kaellis on Wednesday opened a dental practice in the 80-year-old wooden church built by Emmanuel Baptist congregation at Gladstone and Fernwood.

Looking every year its age outside, the cosy, rebuilt interior is one doctor's attempt to bridge the economic-social gap.

Where thoroughly modern waiting rooms in a medical-dental building may have stereophonic. Muzak, shag broadloom and walnut panels, Kaellis' reception area has the original refurnished four-inch wooden flooring, painted wainscoting, chapel ceiling and bright new floral wallpaper.

They are friendly sounds for people who may feel alienated by the conventional approach to dentistry or institutional medicine.

DENTIST'S SUPPORT

But the Victoria and district Dental Society also support Kaellis' concept. A panel of local dentists will give free treatment in emergency situation to indigent youth.

Kaellis is not running a free clinic, but the fees are negotiable, worked out between patient and doctor on the basis of need and ability to pay. The first day was profitless.

Kaellis makes clear that he wishes to do nothing to offend the college of dental surgery who grants him a licence.

One of its professional rules of conduct prohibits advertising or any comparison of fees which may be charged.

"For this service to survive there must be an income from fees. Your co-operation is essential. We will attempt to adjust fees in cases of hardship. You may discuss your fee problem with us."

Why did he do it?

Many kinds of people may be going without proper dental care because they feel outside the "straight" society of which medicine and dentistry are representative; are offended by the trappings of some dental offices; the fees are more than they can afford; they are far from home without local contacts, or simply because they can't get an appointment for months.

They may be hippies, transient youth, welfare families, old age pensioners, students, low income earners, or Kaellis' friend from the university.

"This is a socially acceptable situation," Kaelis said. He'll never get rich at it, but he doesn't want that anyway. He said he owns no house, owes no money, plans to sell his car and his children are becoming self-sufficient. "It's not hard to live on $8,000 a year."

BORROWED MONEY

Pacific Community Self-Development Society — Cool Aid — makes it possible for the dentist to create such a service by providing the premises at nominal rent, with a contract that will benefit Cool Aid's social undertakings.

Kaellis will take an $8,000 annual income. Any other proceeds will be used by Cool Aid for social development projects.

The clinic was launched with borrowed money. It is hoped a federal grant may be secured to continue the clinic for as low an operating cost as possible.

The dentist and Wade have worked with University of Victoria associate professor of anthropology and sociology Roy Watson in seeking a demonstration grant from the national health and welfare department.

Up to this point Cool Aid provided only emergency dental work on a restricted, part time basis. Now the facility, has all the equipment and assistance necessary to offer a full range of dental services from preventative through corrective and replacement work.

Further, he'll keep accessible hours: 9 a.m.-5 p.m. Wednesday and Friday; 9 a.m.-3 p.m. Saturday; noon to 8 p.m. Tuesday and Thursday; closed Monday.

It is not a kooky clinic for kooky people, although kooky clients may well be served.

The doctor claims to be solidly entrenched in "straight" society and has the professional background that seems to confirm it.

RESEARCHER

He was born and educated in New York and his credits include a teaching fellowship at New York University in the field of microscipic anatomy. A main area of research was the thyroid gland.

For four years he was a senior research scientist for Bristol Myers Co. in New Jersey, then associate professor at the University of Saskatchewan College of Dentistry.

Kaellis has published scholarly papers in all his fields of interest, operated a part-time dental practice and ran a bookstore in Victoria.

But he is thoroughly absorbed in his new project.

"When I was a kid in Brooklyn I went to charity clinics," the 42-year-old dentist recalled. "This won't be like that. They are dreadful places."

Kaellis does not see himself as a do-gooder, full of self righteousness. He expects to have to steer a course between humility and cynicism in a job he enjoys, hopefully accepted for what it is — a new service in a needy area.

"I hope this will be good for me, a good spiritual exercise," he said.

His way with patients seems direct but gentle and uncondescending.

A boy of about 20, hair touching his shoulders, came in as Kaellis was preparing for afternoon appointments. His jaw was swollen, a gum painfully discolored.

The dentist apologized for not being able to give treatment immediately. (Finishing touches were being applied by a plumber to equipment in the laboratory.)

An old man from a nearby street, one of 11 patients examined the first day, was treated for a toothache with antibiotic medicine and pain pills and will return for further treatment.

FLOWER FEE

So grateful for the service in his own neighborhood, the man took Kaellis a big bunch of flowers from his garden.

A 32-year-old woman on welfare went to him with an abscessed root canal. Welfare would not pay for the cost of surgery, she said, but Kaellis will fix the problem.

A couple brought their 10 and 11-year-old children in to have cavities filled. Kaellis will do it, knowing they have no money.

One of the preventative services he hopes to perform is oral hygiene education. There will be its distributed containing information on diet, tooth care, dental awareness and the need for professional care.

But in Kaellis office education will be a two-way street:

"We've got to change attitudes. When the patient comes in — maybe a so-called hippie — he has got to lose his slavish attitude toward authoritarianism and I've got to drop my assumption of authority."

HERITAGE VICTORIA FOUNDED

Heritage Victoria, a new body devoted to preserving Victoria's oldest buildings, was launched Friday night in a meeting attended by about 30 people at city hall.

Ainslie Helmcken, chairman of the Greater Victoria Historic Building Foundation, said the meeting resulted in merger of his organization and the Capital Region Heritage Foundation.

The two groups will form the new foundation, Heritage Victoria.

Helmcken said pro-tem officers were appointed to make arrangements for the future of the group and to "consider overhauling the constitution of the Greater Victoria Historic Building Society to meet the needs of the new organization."

Slides of similar restoration in San Francisco were viewed at the meeting chaired by Willard Ireland, provincial librarian and archivist. There was "a good discussion of the objectives" of the organization," said Helmcken.

He said membership was not yet very large. A committee has been set up to find ways of raising money and a membership fee will be set.

This Year an End to an Old Nuisance

CORPORAL PUNISHMENT STUDY SUPPORTED

VANCOUVER — A proposal by Victoria trustees to conduct a study into possible alternatives to the use of corporal punishment in schools was supported today by the annual convention of the B.C. School Trustees' Association.

Victoria trustee Walter Donald proposed the resolution saying "discipline in the school is one of the most controversial and talked-about subjects in education.

Donald said he requested the study not because he favors corporal punishment or opposes it, but because alternatives to its use should be investigated.

He said the Victoria board has conducted its own study on the subject and found out that 74 per cent of the people surveyed favored some form of corporation punishment, "but only as a last resort."

Donald's original proposal, seconded by Victoria trustee Mrs. Daphne Temple, was that the BCSTA set aside $2,000 in its 1973 budget for the study.

The proposal brought charges on inconsistency from former BSTA president Jim Campbell of Saturna Island, who said it was the same Victoria trustees who want the financial burden of property taxes for education removed from the taxpaying public.

However, an amendment to the resolution supported by the Victoria board was proposed by Vancouver trustee Peter Bullen that would involve no extra expediture by the BCSTA. The research will be carried out by the association's research branch.

ASK THE TIMES

Q. If I were to win the $3,000 cash prize offered by the Victoria Days Society treasure hunt what taxes if any would be deducted?—A.B.

—A. The district income tax office reports it would qualify as a windfall like a sweepstake or bingo prize and would not be subject to taxation.

ONE SEASONAL RITE FAmiliar to outdoors users won't be required of us this year. The campfire permit, first issued by British Columbia Forest Service in 1927, is no more.

I'm not about to mourn its passing, either. It was simply another nuisancy little item to remember when heading out for a restorative weekend or vacation in the Queen's wildlands.

Perhaps the rules and instructions printed on its back had a beneficial effect on the permit-holder who bothered to read them. But industrial operations, lightning strikes and the careless smoker's discarded butt or match caused more flareups than the campfire ever did, and I don't expect that situation to change in this new fire season.

Even so, all went well enough in the matter of permits for generation unto generation. The official slips were free for the asking. You could pick up a season ducat at any sporting goods store, and if you forgot, the omission could be made good at the nearest ranger station.

Last year, for reasons never satisfactorily explained, the provincial department of lands, forests and water resources under which the Forest Service functions decreed a tougher system.

The May through October campfire permit became virtually impossible to obtain. Short-term permits — and very damned short they were — became the order of the day. Also, the list of issuing outlets was drastically reduced.

It became plain as the summer advanced that by lowering the boom on the camper who ventured beyond the provincial camping parks, the Forest Service had been stuck with a situation that was progressing from the merely irritating to the ridiculous.

A couple of fellows who had headed up-Island for a holiday sojourn in the boonies would return so full of righteous heat that they presented a fire-hazard in their own sizzling persons. The burden of their plaint was that their three-day permit — when they finally managed to snaffle one — was about as useful as dugs on a board.

When the three days expired, they'd been forced to waste time precious to them on a trek out to the nearest centre for a renewal.

An experience or two of that sort set people to thinking. What was the point of these nuisance-restrictions? Who was being served — the public, or the forest industries that have been permitted to obtain a strangle-hold on what should be the public domain?

In any case, I can attest from personal knowledge that many otherwise law-abiding citizens — guys who in earlier years had filed a campfire permit in the hip pocket as a matter of course — adopted a new attitude.

If they could get a permit of reasonable duration without a lot of fuss and bother, fine. Otherwise, the hell with it!

Which may help explain why, with a new fire season upon the land, a rather startling reversal of attitude has taken place. The campfire permit is no longer required.

Regulations covering campfire location, proper extinguishing methods and conditions under which fires may or may not be lit still apply. So do the penalties imposed on the chump who ignores them.

Be warned, too, that the municipalities have their own bylaws governing the lighting of open fires outdoors.

Having replaced the provincial campfire permit with a set of commonsense rules, I hope our British Columbia government will now begin to apply commonsense in another direction.

It is a long time now since the Sloan Commission brought in its report: we need another and more broadly-based enquiry into this whole matter of woods use.

Notably, the rights and needs of an outdoors-minded population that grows larger each year must be taken into account.

I think its long past time that the question of public access to lands sequestered by government as private preserves for the logging companies be closely reviewed.

A lot of us who drew our own conclusions about last year's fire-permit shmozzle are beginning to ask another related question.
